MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$1.50. $1.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the lint is taken from the seed, without a bowing thum to be taken up by the return motion of the rail, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents nubbs, stems sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to remain up to all that is said of them.

On Saturday the dispatches received during the morning reported a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, with sales of only 5,000 bales, and a slight falling off in futures at New York but most factors continued to adhere to their previous pretensions, and up to 12 M. the sales were confined to 300 bales, at prices indicating no quotable variation. The entire sales embraced 600 bales. On Monday, with more encouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York, the market opened with a better feeling, which was subsequently strengthened by the later dispatches from the latter, reporting an advance of ⅛c. in spots, and the entire improvement in prices was realized. The demand was only moderate, the business being again confined to 650 bales, but the movement no doubt would have been on a more liberal scale had it not been checked by the stringent pretensions of factors. On Tuesday we noticed a continuation of the previous inquiry, but the movement was restricted by brokers being unable to find the kinds wanted, only a portion of the stock usually being offered, and the actual supply comprising an unusually unsatisfactory assortment. The sales summed up 1,300 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,200 bales, against 5,400 for the corresponding time last week and 3,700 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 989,198 bales, against 1,200,723 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to this latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 286,069 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 288,862—3,441,094 against 3,730,956. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 34,669 bales to Great Britain, and no decrease of 39,711 to France, and of 182,408 to other foreign ports. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday, the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $10, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jardon is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner-load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees; William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran, J. H. Keller, B. O. L. Rayne, G. W. W. Goodwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

THE camp meeting at Jones' camp ground, Castor circuit, Homer district, will commence August 18, 1875. We desire all to tent who can. Preachers are especially invited to attend. This camp ground is situated about three miles east of Vernon, in Jackson parish, La., and can boast of some of the finest mineral springs in the country. F. G. HOCUTT.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, June 16.—To-day has been given up to the reception of the visiting military bodies, and from early morning the streets have been alive with gay uniforms and resonant with stirring strains of martial music. The people of Boston, with much of the enthusiasm of the war period, have given themselves over to hospitality, and have welcomed the military and civic bodies with an ardor quite in unison with the patriotic spirit of the day, forgetting the differences of the past. The crowds who thronged the principal streets through which the visiting military paraded on their way to the hotels bestowed the heartiest applause on the men from the South, and a wave of cheers swept along the masses crowded on the sidewalks and filling every available space from roof to pavement.

The arrival of the Norfolk Artillery, escorting as their guest Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, afforded the cheerful spectacle of the loyal people of Boston paying an ovation to an ex-Confederate officer. Gen. Lee bowed again and again as applause greeted him on every corner. The tattered battle-flag of a Pennsylvania regiment, as it passed State street, was also sainted with rounds of applause, and the spectacle of such an era of reunion and fellowship was one never to be forgotten.

OMAHA, June 16.—Grasshoppers, in still greater numbers than any day yet, have been flying at a very great height northwest throughout this State to-day. The damage thus far is comparatively small, and it is only in occasional localities that any damage is done. The market gardeners around here have suffered extensively.

LEAVENWORTH, June 16.—The grasshoppers have disappeared from this region. The air for the past four days has been black with them going north. The farmers are preparing to replant.

BOSTON, June 17.—The Union Volunteers, under Gen. Banks, presented regimental colors to the Fifth Maryland. Seventy-five thousand strangers are here. The Southern soldiers have the lion's share of the hospitality.

BOSTON, June 17.—The day is cloudless. Entering trains are swarmed with visitors. Teams are prohibited from the streets. Notwithstanding the crowds, the order is excellent. But few arrests have been made. The State troops led the parade. The most hearty shouts were reserved for the Philadelphia regiment clad in gray, the Maryland Fifth. Charleston Light Infantry and New York Seventh. The Maryland Fifth bore the elegant flag presented to it yesterday.

ATCHISON, KAN., June 17.—Vast swarms of locusts are passing north. Their general course seems northwest. But few of the pests remain in town. Reports from five-sixths of the State promise immense crops. It is estimated that the Arkansas valley will produce two million bushels of wheat, and northwestern Kansas as much more in rye, barley and oats.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The wind, rain and hard storms have greatly damaged the crops in the central portions of the State. There are reports from Lexington and Lafayette counties of the appearance of millions of toads and grasshoppers.

ST. LOUIS, June 18.—One of the most violent and destructive rainstorms that has ever visited the city was that which struck St. Louis about three o'clock this morning. The lightning accompanying the storm was so constant that the heavens appeared as one blaze of fire, and at one time during the storm a newspaper could be distinctly read by the light of the electricity. At two o'clock the storm-clouds reached a point immediately over the city, and about three the rain began to descend in a solid block of water.

Shortly after the commencement of the rain the wind came in furious gusts. The rain continued to pour down steadily for two hours. In the lower portions of the city cellars and basements, and in some instances the first stories, of many houses were completely flooded, damaging furniture, family supplies and merchandise.

CINCINNATI, June 18.—Indiana had an earthquake to-day. At Sidney a druggist's shelving was thrown to the floor. The inhabitants fled to the streets.

CHICAGO, June 18.—There was a slight earthquake throughout the State.

NEW YORK, June 19.—A special dispatch says the insurrection at La Paz has been successful: Since the second of June the military governor and all the Federal Mexican officials have been made prisoners, and the Federal troops stationed at San Antonio have fallen back before the revolutionists. Senor Baru is the leader of the revolution.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 19.—Advices from Shanghai say: Intelligence has been received from Chin Klang that a body of native soldiery insulted the United States consul and his wife. Two of the aggressors were arrested and temporarily confined in the British consulate, when a mob of soldiers surrounded the building and endeavored to effect the rescue of their companions. The Europeans here hastily mustered and prepared to defend the consulate, but the Chinese authorities succeeded in quieting the mob. The British and American consuls at this city have left for Chin Klang. The United States man-of-war Palos and the British war ship Thalia will follow them.

FORT LARAMIE, June 22.—A party from the Black Hills arrived here today bringing the following intelligence: Prof. Jennings' party and the expedition under Col. Dodge have formed a prominent camp on French creek, near Harney's Peak, which they have called Camp Harney.

Gold seems to have been found in abundance. Nearly a hundred miners were found there in different camps, who have made claims and done considerable work in building sluices, digging ditches, etc. Some of the party report that the soldiers in the command have panned out gold-dust of rich quality. The command is reported in good condition.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, June 16.—The session of the Prussian Diet is formally closed.

Bismarck, before leaving for the country, received the foreign representatives, and gave each one assurances of the peaceful disposition of Germany.

MONTREAL, June 16.—The union of the Presbyterian Church and the Church of Scotland has been consummated. The united church is to be denominated the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

PARIS, June 17.—The Assembly passed the university education bill by a majority of 54 votes. An amendment of M. Paris was adopted providing that degrees be awarded by a board of examiners, to consist half of State and half of free professors. This is regarded as a victory for the Ultramontanes, as the free professors are clericals.

LONDON, June 18.—The Moscow Gazette says: "England having declined to enter into intimate relations with Russia unless the Central Asian States are placed under the protection of international law, Russia has no reason to leave the alliance of the three Emperors and enter into league with that country."

PARIS, June 19.—Mr. Firman, an American spiritualist who professed to photograph deceased persons, has been convicted of swindling and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

LONDON, June 21.—In the House of Lords to-day the Marquis of Bath asked Baron Lyttelton, one of the governors of Eton College, whether it was true that the head-master and governors had given their sanction to the students' meetings contemplated by certain revival preachers. Lord Lyttelton replied that the governors were to consider the matter to-morrow. He read several letters, one of which stated that a protest had been circulated in the school against Moody and Sankey's proposed revival meetings, and up to last Saturday evening it had received one hundred and fifty signatures, including those of two school captains. The head-master of Eton writes that, hearing Messrs. Moody and Sankey intended to hold a service in the neighborhood,' he did not feel that he was bound to place restrictions on the boys, but when informed that these gentlemen proposed to stay several days at Eton he immediately wrote to them that he could not allow the students to attend their meetings. He received answer from Moody and Sankey that one service only was to be held.

Lord Overstone deprecated the attendance of students at such meetings.

The Earl of Shaftesbury objected to a debate without notice, and the subject was dropped.

In the House of Commons Capt. Baillie Cochrane gave notice that he should ask Mr. Gladstone whether he gave Mr. Moody a letter of introduction to the authorities of Eton.

LONDON, June 22.—At the last moment Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been notified that they will not be permitted to hold their services at Eton. Accordingly they have given up their appointment there, and will go to Windsor and preach in the town hall there at half-past two o'clock this afternoon.

THE MEXICAN UNION.—The Mexican union is composed of 27 States, with a federal district, and the territory of Lower California, having a total population of 9,343,470. The annual revenue of the Federal government in 1872-73 was about $15,296,755, of which $9,265,700 was collected at the maritime customhouse; $2,217,275 was realized from the sale of stamped paper, used by law for legal documents, receipts, etc.; $10,236 from the tax of carriages and $474,819 from the postal service. The army consists of 15,407 infantry, 5,140 cavalry, 1,453 artillery, 93 coast guards and 284 invalid corps—in all 24,387—which costs, with a slight expenditure for the repair of fortifications, and with their arms, uniforms, etc., upward of $8,000,000 per annum, or more than half of the revenue. Formerly church bells and drums sounded the way to distinction in Mexico, but now only the drums remain. There are many indications, however, that this epoch of martial glory is about at an end, and that the Mexicans see that republicanism can exist without the support of bayonets.

WHAT, already satisfied! This is self-deception;—Satisfaction, without hungering and thirsting, comes only when we behold God's face in righteousness and awake in his likeness.—W. T. Besser.

DELHI DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This body has just closed its annual session, having assembled in Trenton, La., June 3, 1875. Owing to the high stage of the water in parts of the district only about half of the preachers were present; and, as this time of year is a busy one for farmers, we had but few lay delegates present. As usual in north Louisiana, no Bishop was in attendance, but Bro. C. W. Carter, our presiding elder, was on hand; so we have no right to complain. The spiritual condition of the church was fully inquired into. The attendance upon the ordinances and social meetings of the church is improving, and from many places reports of refreshing from the presence of God were related. Missionary collections are good. Of the total amount assessed to the charges represented in the Conference, both for foreign and domestic, only a few dollars is uncollected. Another encouraging fact is that all except $10 was given to send the gospel abroad.

The Sunday school cause is gaining strength, several new schools having just commenced.

Our magazines and lesson papers seem to have given satisfaction in all schools where they are used, with one exception.

The finances of the church, if we would judge according to quarterage received by the preachers, are in a terrible condition. Several preachers with families have received less than $100 each, and the year half gone. Comment is unnecessary. Some had done much better, but none up to the mark. Over seven-eighths of the entire assessments are still behind.

The temperance cause is gaining ground. From all sides we hear of good results, and the people of our church seem to have less to do with this accursed evil than ever before.

Our district camp meeting will commence, near Delhi, on the first Wednesday in September.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has a large subscription list, and in the opinion of the people of this district there is no better church paper published. There is, however, much complaint about the subscription department. Many well-authenticated instances were adduced where the publisher had sent out his own receipts, and yet duns months afterward were sent to the same subscribers.

To sum it all up, our Conference was a success. We met in Christ and he in us; and in our sessions, in the love-feast, in the preached word and in the Lord's Supper, we received many precious tokens of his communion with us.

J. LANE BORDEN,
Secretary.

MONTGOMERY CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The second Quarterly Conference of the Montgomery circuit was held at Atlanta, in Winn parish, on the last Saturday in May. It had the largest attendance of stewards, local preachers and brethren ever witnessed, I dare say, within the bounds of the Alexandria district since its organization as such. Bro. Boddie, the preacher in charge, has gone into this work body and soul. The Quarterly Conference was left by the presiding elder and the preacher in charge with assessments pocketed, and the valuable accession of twenty-seven members to the church. The preacher in charge is grateful for the most abundant provision made for himself. At Atlanta a parsonage, neat, ample and elegant, has been purchased. At Winnfield means have been collected and the contract let for the building of a new church. At Montgomery negotiations are being made for the purchase of the Catholic church of that place, long since abandoned by them on account of the advancing inroads of Protestantism. But, more remarkable than all, there was preparation for three camp meetings at different points on the circuit—all this year.

But while this was the most remarkable, yet it was not the most grateful feature of this Quarterly Conference to the writer. The zeal and earnestness of the children in the Sunday school, at their celebration at Atlanta, under the skillful management of Bro. Daniel Barr; their superintendent, moved my profoundest emotions. Oh, these Sunday schools! Their efficiency is the best proof of fidelity. In the fact that so many have consecrated their lives to their Father's business is their vindication. It is the divine evidence that where his word has been taught it is shown in hearts quickened and aroused "about their Father's business." Verily, "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." J. S. WHITE.

P. S.—In the town of Natchitoches everything seems to be favorable. I have large congregations and a Sunday school amply equipped.

J. S. W.

NATCHITOCHES, June 5, 1875.

NORTH WARREN CIRCUIT, VICKSBURG DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The second Quarterly Conference for this work convened at Wesley chapel May 25, and passed off profitably to the church, closing on Sabbath evening. Spiritually this circuit is in a healthy and prosperous state. The crop prospect is very flattering, and the people are cheerful. The health of the country is remarkably good. We have a pleasant circuit and many good people—some holy men of God; and, thank God, we have a few good men and women here on this circuit who seem to study and look after the wants and comfort of the preacher and his family, as well as the workings and interests of the church. God bless the people of North Warren. We are praying and looking for better times here, and we trust that the brethren will join us in this prayer. The information that we have from the presiding elder of this district is that the district is in a promising and prospering condition.

WARRINGTON, FLA.—Mr. Editor: We are still progressing with our little Sabbath school and church. Yesterday we had a great and glorious time. We met at nine o'clock in the morning, and sang praises to God from the Sacred Harp till eleven. After that we heard a splendid sermon preached from the first chapter of Haggai by the Rev. L. A. Jones. We felt the Spirit of God in our midst, and we all received a great blessing. Bro. Jones called for mourners, and nearly all in the house went up. Nine applied for membership. We believe that Jesus Christ hath power on earth to forgive sins, and is doing it too. It is a beautiful sight to see our friends, neighbors and neighbors' children go up to the altar and give their hearts to God. It fills our hearts with gratitude to God, and makes us rejoice in the hope of our Lord Jesus Christ. We pray God to revive his work in our midst, and that this may be the commencement of a great and glorious revival.

Respectfully,

THEODORE E. KELLY.

RUTLEDGE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The second Quarterly Conference for the Rutledge circuit, Alabama Conference, was held at Mount Pleasant on the fifth and sixth of June.

Rev. S. P. Richardson, our presiding elder, was with us, preaching with much power and great acceptability. For a country church, the congregation was immense. The Holy Ghost was with us in his reviving power. The church was blessed. A large number took the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and five persons united with the church.

The various reports to the Conference were encouraging. The finances, notwithstanding the hard times, are coming up better than any one expected in the beginning of the year. The preacher is getting a fair support, and the presiding elder is by no means forgotten.

A. M. JONES.

RUTLEDGE, ALA., June 11, 1875.

GRAND BAY MISSION, MOBILE DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: We have not held any protracted meetings on this work as yet, but we have good times at most all of the appointments. We have received upward of twenty-five members this year. The Sabbath schools and class meetings are doing well. Bro. H. Farnell says that his Sabbath school at Pleasant Valley church will raise the full amount assessed the whole work for foreign missions. Three years ago we had no church at this place, and but two members. Now we have a good church, worth $600, a live membership and a good Sabbath school. We are building at other places. H.

PATTERSONVILLE, LA.—Mr. Editor: On last Saturday, the twelfth instant, I organized a church, fifteen miles from Brashear, with about twelve members; all new accessions to the church; four by baptism, the rest by form. Oh, what a mission-field there is here! I was called to this place, to marry a couple. While there we organized a church. We hope to accomplish good in the name of the Lord. Pray for us.

Yours fraternally,

R. H. DAVIS.

Huntsville Female College Commencement.

MR. EDITOR: On Sunday, June 6, the sermon for the occasion was preached by that true and noble preacher of the gospel, Dr. John B. McFerrin, of Nashville, Tenn. If the doctor's reputation does extend from New York to San Francisco, it lost nothing by his effort on this occasion. He gave us the gospel. The old people—to many of whom he preached forty years ago—cried for joy, and the children heard with gladness his fearless declarations on the evil of lying, and the beauties and glory of truth. It is hoped that that vast assembly of hearers left the church quietly saying: "I'll never lie again."

On Monday morning at ten o'clock, in the college chapel, an elegant audience was seated to hear the essays and readings of the sub-seniors and juniors. To understand how girls and young ladies could be trained to perform their parts with such ease and skill before so select an audience is itself a mystery. It was explained by President Price, without taxing or straining his modesty, when he announced that the young ladies had been exclusively trained by Mrs. Kate Thompson, a teacher of rare merit and peculiar gifts, in the college.

That evening, in the City Hall, was the annual concert. It is worth a year's patience to hear such music. On this occasion two eminent German musicians, Messrs. J. and E. Schneider, accomplished gentlemen as well as superior teachers, introduced their new organ, manufactured by themselves, in the college, expressly for Prof. Price. Its tones are rich, and almost heavenly in sweetness. The superior vocalization evinced by the young ladies at the concert is mainly due to the toil and skill of Mrs. Fannie Ferguson, widow of Rev. Fred. Ferguson, of the old Alabama Conference. In her department she has no superior, and the good wishes and prayers of hosts of friends go with her to Nashville, Tenn., her future home.

Passing by some exercises, we come to Wednesday, the great day—the graduating hour. In the morning there was a contest in spelling for a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, which had been offered as a prize by that big-hearted agent, Mr. Robert E. Park, of Macon, Ga., in behalf of those most celebrated educational publishers, Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., of New York city. While the defeated spellers were sobbing and crying over their loss, Miss Sally Parton ascended the stage and received the dictionary. Other prizes at this hour, awarded for various successful performances, were bestowed, accompanied by short addresses from different gentlemen, selected previously for the purpose, all of whom acquitted themselves handsomely.

On Wednesday evening, in the City Hall, a vast concourse assembled to witness the closing graduating ceremonies. Dressed elegantly and beautifully for the occasion, twelve blooming young ladies, having completed the full course, were presented for diplomas. Their compositions were audibly read and clearly enunciated, the listening audience drinking in the golden lessons of truth as they fell from the lips of those interesting young creatures. At last came the "farewell chorus" by the new graduates, who suddenly ceased to be school girls, and as suddenly became women, abandoning the school stage, and entering with hope and buoyancy upon the great stage of human life. Then the scene closed, the curtain fell, and all dispersed to our homes, wiser, happier and better than we had witnessed the twenty-first annual commencement, and the third under President Price, of the Huntsville Female College.

The people of south Alabama, south Mississippi and Louisiana, and even of Texas, will be proud to read this account of a Methodist school, located in such a city as Huntsville, Ala., noted for its healthfulness of location, the elegance of its churches, and the refinement and culture of its people. They need not send their daughters to North Carolina and to Virginia, not even to Tennessee and Kentucky, to enjoy mountain air and good schools. We have as good as the best, here in this beautiful city, resting in the valley of the Tennessee river. The past year one hundred and fifty young ladies have attended. Next year let two hundred and fifty occupy and grace its spacious halls and elegant grounds. This is the wish of a PATRON.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., June 12, 1875.

Constitution of Sunday School Missionary Societies.

The last clause of article 18 of the Constitution of the Board of Missions is as follows: "It shall be the duty of the preacher in charge to form a missionary society in every Sunday school or church of his work, and whatever moneys are raised in these societies shall be exclusively for the General Board." Quite a number of inquiries came to the secretaries in reference to a form of constitution for such societies.

We would recommend that the whole school be considered members of the society—the teachers a board of managers. Let the society elect, say, the pastor president, the superintendent vice president, one of the members secretary, another treasurer. Place one of our juvenile cards, or one ruled to suit the views of the board of managers, in the hands of a member of each class elected by the class; let the collector so elected get a subscription from each member of the class, and any other friends not members of the church—collections to be made monthly. Say once a quarter hold a meeting of the society, let the collector from each class, as the class is called by the secretary, advance to the treasurer's table, hand in the card, with names attached. Let the money collected accompany the card—that from the infant class in a box, from the other classes in envelopes. Let the treasurer keep a record of the names and amounts in a well-bound book. After the cards and money have been handed in let there be singing and speeches from juvenile and adult members previously selected, followed, if the audience justifies, by a collection. This is simple, and if earnestly worked will be found effective.

J. B. MCFERRIN,
D. C. KELLEY,
Secretaries.

Missionary Blanks.

The secretaries have, during the two weeks just passed, sent to every presiding elder in the church a package containing, first, blank reports, to be filled up by the pastors and returned to the mission-room, at Nashville, before the sessions of the Annual Conferences of which the preachers are members. The sooner these blanks can be filled up and returned, the better for the secretaries. A permanent record will be kept of these reports, from which the relative care of preachers and the missionary spirit of churches can be readily ascertained. The changes from year to year will mark the advance or retrogression of church life. Statistics are admirable spiritual thermometers. Secondly, books for collectors, ruled so as to allow the subscriptions to be collected monthly, as we are sure is best at many places now, and we doubt not will become more and more the successful method. Accompanying these books are certificates which, to save postage, can be pasted in other books, ruled as the specimen sent. Also cards for juvenile collectors. These may be used as is suggested in the accompanying form of missionary constitution for Sunday schools, or where there is no such organization in the Sunday school, then placed by the pastor in the hands of such young persons as he may select. All these aids we offer as assistants to pastors in the work of reaching, and, where it can be done, expanding collections beyond the assessments on the various charges. They will, as the board believes, greatly aid in giving method to our collections, and have an influence to reach every member of the church—the point toward which our energy is now being bent. A letter without special address accompanies the packages, which we hope will induce efforts to assist in specific missionary work on the part of individuals, Sunday schools, women's societies, etc.—these specific contributions to be beyond the assessments on the pastoral charges. The board, June 16, determined to send out to the aid of the Rev. J. E. Newman, in Brazil, a young member of the Tennessee Conference—the son of one of our best-known and most beloved presiding elders. Who will come forward and propose to assist in bearing his expenses? We hope this will be done at once by liberal friends of the church. If you will take the trouble to inform yourself about the open door in Brazil, we are sure there can be no delay. The money must be ready by the session of the Tennessee Conference.

D. C. KELLEY,
Associate Sec., B. M.

"MY DEAR," said a husband to his wife, on observing new red stockings on his only heir, "why have you made barber poles of our child's legs?" "Because he is a little shaver," was the neat reply.

OUR BURIED FRIENDS CAN WE FORGET?

Our buried friends can we forget?
Although they've passed death's gloomy river,
They live within our memory yet,
And in our love must live forever.
And though they've gone awhile before,
To join the ransomed hosts in heaven,
Our hearts will love them more and more
Till earthly chains at last be riven.

I saw them bid this world adieu;
I saw them on the rolling billow;
Their far-off home appeared in view,
While yet they pressed a dying pillow.
I heard the parting pilgrim tell,
While passing Jordan's loosely river:
Adieu to earth, now all is well—
Now all is well with me forever.

O how I long to join their wing,
And range their fields of blooming flowers!
Come, holy watchers, come and bring
A mourner to your blissful bowers.
I'd speed with rapture on my way,
Nor would I pause at Jordan's river;
With songs I'd enter endless day,
And live with my loved friends forever.

BY REV. W. STILLMAN, M. D., ENTERPRISE, MISS.

Notwithstanding man's faculty of reasoning has been greatly weakened and obscured by the fall of his federal head and representative, still it is an inestimable gift—noble in itself when viewed alone as it relates to his temporal wants, and that relation which he bears to other men. But when we view it in its intimate relation to God and our spiritual good it assumes a more elevated rank. It is the only innate faculty that bears a likeness of man's Creator. Its power knows no boundary in the investigations of natural things. It enables man to determine the size, density and orbits of the planets; to approximate the distance to the fixed stars, which are hung out as lamps along the pathway to the spirit world; to trace the blazing comet in its erratic and far-off course; and to read the name of God in the "things that are made." Still, with all its greatness, it is not sufficient of itself to unite man in harmonious concord to the Almighty, to soothe his sorrows in the hour of affliction, or open the gate of heaven to his soul.

It having been shown, then, that the exercise of reason alone cannot exalt man to a harmonious fellowship with God, what, therefore, does man need in order that he may be united to God, and have a more extended view, a clearer perception and a more convincing evidence of things unseen by mortal eyes? It is faith. Not simply belief, which is nothing more than an act of the understanding, and consequently liable to various changes; but faith, which is an active, moving and abiding principle, embracing all the intellectual and moral powers of the man—his head and his heart—and which is to its possessor the "evidence" or conviction "of things not seen." Theologically the term faith, according to St. Paul's definition of it, or as the original or Greek text may be rendered, means a strong persuasion, and a clear demonstration of things hoped for and of things invisible. The power of exercising this faith is bestowed upon man by the Almighty to supply what the faculty of reason lacks. It is the combined action of the whole mind and heart, and commences where both reason and testimony end, and becomes testimony itself, assuring its possessor of what reason alone could not do.

This faith, then, being the combined action of the whole mind and all the powers of the soul, it may, if doubted by those who hold to the doctrine that faith is a mysterious, abstract principle, and is strictly a gift of God, be illustrated by the combined power of all the lenses of a well-constructed telescope, which, when used separately, are nothing but magnifying glasses, by which objects near at hand may be examined. But let these lenses all be made clean, and properly arranged, and the tube drawn out to its required length, and it will enable a man, by looking through the combination of lenses, to see and to some extent understand things which to his natural vision were invisible, and far beyond his faculty of reasoning. So reason and all the other powers of the mind, when used separately, only enable the man to investigate things in the range of his senses; but let them all be combined with all the moral faculties, let them be properly adjusted, made clean from the dust of sin, and the tube of hope drawn out to its fullest extent, and the man can look through it and behold the glory of God, and the end and reward of those who love and serve him:

Surely, then, faith is the "evidence of things not seen" or comprehended by our natural senses, and is the appendix to reason, or the climax of all the mental and moral powers of the man. Charles Wesley well understood both the nature and power of faith when he wrote that beautiful and heart-cheering hymn on the "Work of Faith," and especially as expressed in the fifth and sixth stanzas. His language is:

"The things unknown to feeble sense,
Unseen by reason's glimm'ring ray,
With strong, commanding evidence,
Their heavenly origin display.

"Faith lends its realizing light,
The clouds disperse, the shadows fly,
The Invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye."

This view of faith, requiring the combined action of our intellectual and moral powers, with that of the centralization of our affections on God, is evidently the reason why it is impossible to please him without faith; and may we not at least infer that it is the reason why the Almighty, in his wisdom, instituted faith as the condition on the part of man of justification? It is the only act that man is able to put forth that requires the combined energy of the whole mind and heart. Nothing short of this can be well-pleasing in the sight of God. Faith, then, is not an abstract principle, to be sought after as one would seek after a lost pearl, nor to be waited for with the hope that God will in some supernatural manner bestow it upon us. It is to be found within us, by the combined action of the powers that God has already bestowed upon us; consequently every man is without excuse who fails to exercise these powers, to make the effort, and stretch forth the "withered hand."

Created Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the thirteenth Bro. Richardson assumes "that God cannot, in the nature and relation of things, create moral holiness." If by the "nature and relation of things" he means the nature of man as it now is, and his relation to God as he now stands, we are agreed. Job xiv, 4: "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." No more can the descendants of an unholy man, by their nature and relation to him, be holy than can an evil tree bring forth good fruit, or an impure fountain emit pure water. But to say that because this inherent cause in the present moral status of man necessarily produces a corresponding effect in the moral nature of his offspring—that therefore God cannot, in his own "nature and relation to things," create moral holiness—is simply absurd.

The existence of Cain, Abel, and indeed the successive generations of mankind, is the result of a mediate and not an immediate creation of God. It is, then, absurd to ask: "If God can create holiness, why are not all men holy?" As well might he stand on the banks of a stream flowing from a bitter fountain and ask: "If God can create sweet water, why does he not cause sweet water to flow from the fountain that emits this stream?" Indeed the communication in question has the appearance of a mass of conglomerated theological ideas, without clearness in anything. He says: "Created and imputed holiness are the same." This can no more be established in the mind of the theological world than it can be proven that the moral and relative relation of man to God at the time he determined to create him "In his own image," and that existed after man's transgression, are the same; and these two states are as widely divergent as the effulgence of a noonday sun is to the gloom of a midnight darkness. The one is the result of the divine will when he determined to create man in his own image; the other is "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity." The first holiness is the result of a pure and holy cause, and the other is said to be "the righteousness of Christ so attributed to man as to become his own, and that he is therefore justified by it." The first is a result of the hypothesis of his creation, and is therefore an inherently existing principle; the second is the attributing to him that which belongs to another, and is therefore an accident.

But to say that God did not create Adam holy evolves one of two theories—either that God himself is not holy, or that a holy tree can bear unholy fruit. But if God is holy, we ask: "How, 'in the nature and relation of things,' could he create Adam without holiness?" "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Can light produce darkness? Can love produce hate, or purity impurity? As well may we expect to see any or all of these impossibilities come to pass as to suppose that a holy God could create Adam in his own likeness, and yet without holiness.

But if Adam was without holiness, then we are no longer surprised that he transgressed the law of God; for the law was holy, and Adam was required to perform a holy obedience; and as none but a holy person can perform holy obedience to a holy law, and Adam was without holiness, we see at once that his transgression was necessitated. But that he was created holy is easily proven by the Scriptures. Ephesians iv, 24: "And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Colossians iii, 10: "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Now take these two quotations in connection with Genesis i, 27: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." Thus Moses tells us that Adam was created in the image of God, and St. Paul tells us that that image consisted in "knowledge, righteousness and true holiness." But Bro. Richardson says those who contend that Adam was created holy are in the ranks of the Calvinists. Then farewell, my brother; but we must be permitted to name some of our company. Dr. Watson says: "If likeness to God in man consisted in bodily shape, this would not have been an argument against human representations of the Deity; but it imports, as Howe well expresses it, that 'we are to understand that our resemblance to him, as we are his offspring, lies in some higher, more noble and more excellent thing, of which there can be no figure; as who can tell how to give the figure or image of a thought, or of the mind or thinking power?' In spirituality, and consequently immateriality, this image of God in man, then, in the first instance consists."

Dr. A. Clark says: "God is holy, just, wise, good and perfect; so must the soul be that sprang from him; there could be in it nothing impure, unjust, evil, low, base, mean or vile. It was created in the image of God."

Mr. Wesley says: "In the image of God was man made, holy as he that created him was holy."

Drs. McClintock and Strong say: "Adam was formed immediately by God, as was the humanity of Christ. In each the nature was spotless, and richly endowed with knowledge and true holiness."

With these reflections we leave the subject for the present.

Consistency and Inconsistency.

MR. EDITOR: Should a man's practice be consistent with his theory? Again, is a man's theory always consistent with his practice? And yet again, should it not be to result in the good intended and in the way intended? I do not much like calling a thing by one name and using it by another; that is the same as not to use it at all. Now, Mr. Editor, I got to thinking the other day—about the church chiefly—and thought as follows: I thought that all churches are not what they used to be in the preaching of their doctrines—i. e., in "faith and order"—or that they were most outrageously misrepresented. If they were as said to be formerly, some of them, there has been a considerable qualification somewhere. When I was a child "our preachers," as I used to call them, were considered good pluck if they dared to preach "free grace," "faith," "apostasy," and "the possible salvation of all men" in the neighborhood of some other churches, for fear of the cry of "Wolf in sheep's clothing," "hypocrite," "heresy." But now these some other churches preach "all these notions," and, I reckon, believe somewhat in them. And the strangest of all is they have not revised their creed to correspond with their "pulpit ideas." They seem to hold tenaciously to their first creed, but I suppose it is only theoretically so. Is this consistency? I wish I could remember names and dates and places; I could then save you the trouble of answering so many queries.

But, again, was not that man's name Wesley who started such a rumpus over there in London on the religious question? And was he the founder of a "society" or "band" called Methodists? They tell me he was a consistent man—preached what he really believed to be Bible truth, notwithstanding his mother church was opposed by him. Wouldn't it be well if everybody else would yield to their convictions in Bible doctrine, and not believe a thing simply because it is their church's ipse dixit! There are a good many of this sort of people in our world. I reckon the Methodist Episcopal Church in America was founded or organized by this Mr. Wesley. I just guess, from what I can learn, that it is very consistent in what it believes and preaches. What I mean by consistent is that its faith and preaching harmonize. As soon as this little Methodist "society" came into being some of the excitable churches began to search among the musty records of the past for true church rites and claims; not, as I suppose, to see if they were truly orthodox, but to see if these little "societies" were not really heterodox. But, however, they did not make their "apostolic succession" search a very happy success, did they? Some say they did; others say they did not. Mr. Wesley, in getting out of this hobbie of "formalism," spiritual dead ism, and some other equally dangerous isms—as, for instance, "unconditional election-ism," etc.—showed to the thinking world a sickly set of religionists. Theorists then and even since then would remind one of an "election-day bully." On this score things are not like they used to be. It has done a great deal—this Wesley consistency—in establishing and setting the religious world right. Wesley, I think it was, said the "world is my parish." This was the theory he set out with; and, consistent with the saying, he has almost touched, and I think eventually will touch, all the points of the compass through his own and other churches, modified by his consistency. I reckon that his and our consistency in theory and practice is what has done so much in making the "Methodist house of worship" popular to an intelligent world. How can any one consistently place "salvation by faith" and "unconditional election" in conjunction?—holding to the latter in creed and preaching the former? Yet this is the case. As well had we place darkness and light together, and call them one and the same thing. I wish to state here that these "other churches" are—well, I can't say what; only that they preach what I believe, and I do not belong to them either. I sometimes hear them, and they preach good old-fashioned Methodist doctrine, if I may judge. They tell me that there is only a slight difference between them and me in the "non-essentials." But right here that thing consistency pops its head up again. If they were to harmonize faith and practice, and I do the same, I do not see how there could be so slight a difference in essentials or non-essentials.

I have but one more query. Does your church stand in statu quo, as from the beginning, upon doctrine? If it does, I reckon it has had a great deal to do with "taking the starch out" of some churches. These are thoughts I had, and of which I intended to speak to you the very first chance. If consistency and inconsistency are not put in their proper places I will not join them, very sure.

Beautiful Star.

Walking abroad on a clear, starlight night, we view the firmament with feelings of awe and wonder. So mighty and grand, so sublime, so beautiful! Upon the background of the deepest, darkest blue are countless myriads of shining worlds emblazoned, varying in brilliancy from the feeble and fickle glow of the firefly to the steady blaze of the world's center light. In wavering, uncertain lines we trace constellation after constellation, occupying the limitless space above, grateful in our hearts to those who, by years of patient toil, have been enabled to give us some insight into the movings of these heavenly bodies, and from the depths of our soul wells up a reverence and adoration for the divine Origin of this magnificent spectacle which mere words are inadequate to express. God of the universe! how supremely glorious are the workings of thy omnipotent power! and yet how sweet are thy tender mercies! The fiery lightning and heavy thunderbolts are balanced by soothing sunshine and dewy showers! To we poor worms of earth, how kind thou art! Hast not thou implanted within us the noble desire to gain immortality beyond the grave? The germ of life has its root within our hearts, and thy holy word is the guide by which we may be transformed into shining angels of light, like "gems of purest ray."

God's people, as a class, display as great variety of character as the celestial bodies vary in brilliancy. The indolent Christian—if there is such a Christian—resembles the satellite, while the working Christian may well be denominated a bright and shining light, illuminating all around him with the glow of charity and piety radiating from his own breast. Which will you choose, brother? Which do you admire, sister? Will you be the insignificant star that rises and sets, and revolves in the multitude, without any peculiar brilliancy? Or will you be that bright, that beautiful star, whose light is the climax of glory and whose form is the climax of beauty? Faith and zeal will give us this eminence. Let us train our hands to work right. Let us train ourselves to act and our minds to think right. Yes, "dare to do right, dare to be true," and you may be that beautiful star, the beacon light from whose fair countenance radiates truth, mercy and wisdom.

From a Reader.

DEAR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: You first made your appearance in my humble home about two years ago, and were your visits discontinued I should miss you sadly. I have often wondered who the kind friend could be who sends me such a treasure every week. How often I pray: "God bless the one who sends me the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE!" I find great pleasure in reading the contents of this sweet messenger, this friend of the poor and afflicted, this noble advocate of Christ's kingdom among men. I read much that is comforting and encouraging in your columns, and I have rejoiced with some and wept with some in reading of their blessings and sorrows. You tell me of those who have died in the Lord, of souls born to God, and you bring me the words of the missionary in far-off heathen lands. You have endeared many to this sad, afflicted heart whose faces I have never seen—Bishop Keener, Bro. Daves and many others. I long to take your dear editor by the hand and thank him for what he has written for me—an invalid. God bless the editor! God speed the ADVOCATE, and may it find a welcome in every Methodist household.

I am not worthy of a space even in the Child's Corner, but I would like to tell your little readers about my wonderful "Church Belle," if agreeable to you. Farewell!

Obituaries

REV. JOHN H. DAVIS was born in Tennessee, A. D. 1807. In early life he was married to Miss Nancy G. Franklin. He spent most of his life in Fayette county, Ala., where he brought up his family of ten children. Seven of these yet live, one of whom is the wife of Rev. John C. Brogan, of the Mississippi Conference. His second marriage was to Mrs. Ferguson, late in life. His third marriage was in December, 1874, to Mrs. Boyd, of Marion, Miss., where he died May 9, 1875.

The Sabbath before his death he rode eight miles to fill his appointment at Lockhart. Against the protest of Dr. Perkins, he attempted to preach. He read his text (Matthew vii, 3) and paused, too sick to proceed. He read the text again and was forced to abandon the effort. After a song and prayer by Bro. Brown, he stood by the pulpit and delivered an affectionate and impressive talk. He "thought his end was near, but was not afraid; had been in the service fifty-two years, and was now ready."

Forty years a local preacher, Father Davis was zealous and useful to the last. Several years he was selected by presiding elders as a supply. In this relation he was happy and useful. He was requested last spring to supply a circuit. It troubled him that he could not. His last intelligible words to Bro. Brogan were: "Write to Bro. —— to get me that circuit." It was his "loved employ"—persuading men to be saved. He excelled in exhortation and moved many souls to the better life.

I deem it one of the precious privileges of my life that for a few days last year I was brought into intimate association with Father Davis. At the Brandon District Conference and at Pilgrim's Rest camp meeting I was drawn to him by his beautiful spirit of Christian simplicity and love. He was one of the most unsophisticated men I ever saw. His very presence blessed me and made me better. It was an era in my Christian life. I begged him to come to my house. I wanted my wife and children to be blessed by the presence and prayers and the remembrance of so good a man. The camp meeting was a delightful occasion. Many souls were saved. Other preachers were there, and good people; but Father Davis was the soul of the meeting. So it seemed to me. I thought him an example of scriptural sanctification. In private I drew from him an expression on this subject. I found him a modest professor of this grace. I think he enjoyed and practiced it.

The following paper was adopted by the Quarterly Conference of Marion circuit, May 29, 1875.

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove out of our midst our most worthy and beloved brother, John H. Davis, for four years a member of this Quarterly Conference and a local elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church South; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the church has lost a faithful minister, the Quarterly Conference a zealous member, and Christianity a devoted advocate.

Resolved, That we offer our tenderest sympathies to the bereaved family, and pray God that their affliction may be sanctified to their ultimate good, as they sorrow not as those having no hope.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Quarterly Conference, and a copy be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

MRS. MARY J. QUINE, daughter of Thomas and Martha J. Bovard, was born in Yazoo county, Miss., July 24, 1834, and died in East Baton Rouge parish, La., March 10, 1875.

She was married to William J. Quine September 18, 1851. Soon after this they moved to East Baton Rouge parish, La. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in early life, and was a devoted Christian lady. Sister Quine was devoted to all the interests of the church. She was prompt in her attendance at preaching and the social meetings of the church; always found at the altar on communion days, gladly commemorating the death and passion of her Savior.

It seemed to be her delight to provide for and entertain the ministers of the gospel. The itinerant preachers felt at home when at the house of Bro. and Sister Quine. She was untiring in nursing the sick, giving them attention day and night. She possessed a comprehensive mind, being always able to assist her husband with her counsel in his business affairs.

Only a short time before she died she called her family to her and made special requests of each one, and gave directions to her children respectively. She did not forget the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. In consequence of the failure of crops for the last two years, and the consequent scarcity of money, Bro. Quine had spoken of discontinuing his paper, but she asked him to renew his subscription and keep the ADVOCATE in the family.

She had lived in the discharge of Christian duty, and when the summons came she was ready to meet death. As she neared the river of death her peaceful, triumphant composure was a source of wonder and astonishment to many who witnessed her departure.

She leaves four children—three sons and one daughter—with a sorrowing husband, to mourn their loss. Two children died in infancy, and passed on to the heavenly world before her.

N. B. YOUNG.

JAMES P. HARRELL, eldest son of Kearny and Marin B. Harrell, was born in Madison county, Ala., October 31, 1844, and died in Osyka, Pike county, Miss., February 9, 1875, aged thirty years, three months and nine days. Few young men have left a better example of untiring industry, of temperance and frugality, which not only led to a competency, but won the respect and confidence of his employers, as well as all who knew him. A soldier in the Confederate army, he was left at its close, like hundreds of others, penniless; but, being no idler, he soon secured a situation on the Jackson railroad, where he continued up to the time of his death. He filled faithfully all duties assigned him, proving, to all that not the position, but the manner in which it is filled, brings the honor. Our friend was not a member of any church, although we often spoke to him on the subject of religion, the importance of seeking the Lord while it was today, and of availing himself of every means of grace to that end. He said he liked to go to church, and did attend whenever an opportunity offered. His moral character was irreproachable. He was taken suddenly and violently ill away from home, and died after four days' illness, and those near him know not that he was dangerously ill until he was speechless, which was a few hours before he died; consequently he left no message.

A FRIEND.

ADA LOU., second daughter of A. G. and Mary E. Loudon, was born October 4, 1871, and died January 25, 1875. Yes, little Ada has gone to him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

F.

LITTLE HENRY LEE SMITH, son of H. L. and L. H. Smith, ceased to suffer April 8, 1875, aged nearly four years. Little Lee has gone to meet his father, who preceded him to the better land but a few months.

A FRIEND.

NORMA, infant daughter of Charles and Susan Hubb, was six months and one day old when she sweetly fell asleep in the arms of her Savior, on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1875.

N. B. YOUNG.

THERE is now on sale in London a remarkable memorial of papal blood-thirstiness—a fac-simile of the medal caused to be struck by Pope Gregory the Thirteenth, to commemorate the slaughter of seventy thousand Protestants in France on the twenty-fourth of August, 1572, by the French King Charles the Ninth. The medal bears on one side the likeness of the Pope, and on the other the effigy of the destroying angel, surmounted by the inscription: "Ugonottorum strages, 1572" (the slaughter of the Huguenots.)

THE Bishop of Lincoln having affirmed that "episcopacy is an institution of God himself," Mr. Matthew Arnold supposes that even before the words, "Let there be light," might have been said, "Let there be bishops."

IN deciding questions of truth and duty, remember that the wrong side has a crafty and powerful advocate in your own heart.

THE SILENT CITY.

There is a fair, fair city
Under the moon to-night,
Where every tower and portal
Is pearly, pearly white;
Pale flowers are softly kissing
Each pillar's marble foot,
And grasses tilt the dew-drops
Like fairy, gem-like fruit.

Sweetly on dome and turret
Is shed the lustrous glow,
With purest radiance flooding
The silent nooks below;
And tracery rich and fruitless,
Woven of light and shade,
Gleameth in moveless beauty
Along each dim arcade.

The world is full of voices
Its rushing will not stay,
But at this enarmed inclosure
The echoes melt away.
There is no sound of music,
No footstep's passing fall—
They of the moon-lit city
Are sleepers, sleepers all.

When summer nights are fairest
My spirit waits and wakes
To walk the silent city,
Beloved, for your sakes.
I kneel with tears and blessing
Where those low tablets stand,
And give once more my darlings
To their Redeemer's hand.

The Banner.

A Methodist Hero One Hundred Years Old.

One of the most interesting events recorded in the history of American Methodism was the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Rev. Father Boehm, which took place, according to arrangements made by the Newark Conference, on Tuesday, June 8, at Trinity church, Jersey City, N. J. Long before the hour for the meeting the church was filled in every part.

During the singing Father Boehm entered the church, assisted by his friends and attended by his physician, Dr. Walter Hadden, and entered the pulpit. The patriarch looked remarkably well, and appeared very young for his years. At the conclusion of the singing Father Boehm was introduced, the congregation rising with him. He spoke as follows: "I rejoice to meet you, my brethren in the Lord, and that I am permitted to see the wonderful progress of the gospel of Christ in the land. There was no town here in 1809, when I passed through. There were no houses but the ferry-house, I think. Blessed be God for his wonderful work throughout the land. I cannot say much, but I commit the rest to my 'venerable' Bro. Atkinson." This was received with great laughter by the audience, and Mr. Atkinson, in rising, appeared somewhat embarrassed, and stated that this was a festive occasion, and Father Boehm was disposed to be festive also. He then read the following autobiographical sketch which had been prepared by Father Boehm:

FATHER BOEHM'S LIFE HISTORY.

I was born in Lancaster county, Pa., on the eighth of June, 1775—one hundred years ago this day. I was one year a subject of King George, as it was not until I had attained that age that the American people renounced their allegiance to the British government by proclaiming the Declaration of Independence. The noise of the battles of Concord and Lexington had scarcely died away when I drew my first breath, so that my history includes nearly the whole of the period of the Revolutionary war. I was a cotemporary of the fathers and founders of the republic, and have lived under the administration of all the Presidents of the United States. I clearly remember the days of Washington's presidency, and I cast my first vote for his successor, John Adams, in 1796. I lived through almost a quarter of the last century, and have lived thus far through the present one, and I have witnessed with my own eyes the rise, progress and present grand development of the United States of America.

The changes and progress of the country within my recollection have been so vast and overwhelming I scarcely know how to speak of them. When I became a man there were only thirteen States. Early in this century Ohio became a member of the Federal Union, and then the star of our empire moved westward until it shone upon the waves of the Pacific ocean. I witnessed the system of slavery in the Southern States, and I have been permitted to see it swept from the land, and the banner of impartial freedom waving triumphantly over every State. Bless the Lord! I well remember the days when a steamboat was unknown, and the railroad unthought of. The winds of heaven wafted our commerce, and horses furnished our swiftest means of travel by land. I myself have traveled over a hundred thousand miles on horseback.

I have witnessed the progress of the nation in population and wealth to a degree that seems incredible to have been attained in one man's lifetime. I have seen the increase of the eldest cities, and the founding and wonderful growth of newer ones. I have observed the advancement of our people from a comparatively rude and pioneer condition to their present high status of intelligence, wealth and refinement. When, in 1809, I first stood upon the site of the city in which we are this day assembled I think there were no buildings upon it except the ferry-house and the farm-houses which here and there dotted it. To-day its streets and buildings cover a territory many miles in circumference, and its population exceeds one hundred thousand souls. Then the city of New York only reached to Canal street and Brooklyn was a very small town. Cincinnati had then only commenced its history, and Chicago was yet to be.

I have seen wonderful progress in the religious world in my time. I was born nine years after the introduction of Methodism in New York by Barbara Heck and Philip Embury, and nine years before the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the election of its first bishops, Coke and Asbury. When my life began there were probably scarcely a half score of Methodist houses of worship on this continent, and there were only 3,148 members and nineteen travelling preachers. When I commenced my public life Methodism was still small, both numerically and financially. There were very few commodious churches except in the large cities, such as St. George's in Philadelphia, Light street in Baltimore, and John street in New York. Our best churches of that day were very inferior compared with those of the present. Our meetings were mostly held, at the time I began to preach, in private houses, in barns, and wherever we could obtain shelter. There was much opposition shown toward us, and I have had stones hurled at me while preaching.

I joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1797, in Boehm's chapel, I being at the time twenty-two years of age. My father, Martin Boehm, was many years a minister among the United Brethren, and was a bishop in that church. He was for a long time a warm personal friend of Bishop Asbury, and toward the close of his life he united with our church. Boehm's chapel is still standing in good condition, and is now the church of the neighborhood where it stands. My father's influence contributed much toward its erection. Bishop Whatcoat furnished the plan of the edifice. It was built in 1791, was the first Methodist church in Lancaster county, and it was one of the early fortresses of American Methodism.

I was licensed to preach January 6, 1800, by the Rev. Thomas Ware, who was then presiding elder on the Chesapeake district, and who at the same time appointed me to travel Dorchester circuit, on the eastern shore of Maryland. Therefore I was never a local preacher, though I have been a witness of the great usefulness of that numerous and honored corps of gospel heralds, whose unremunerated and zealous labors have done so much for the evangelization of this nation. In the days of my effective ministry the local ministry was an indispensable adjunct of our itinerant system.

About four months after I was licensed to preach I attended the General Conference of 1800, in Baltimore. I was present at Richard Whatcoat's ordination as Bishop, in the presence of that body in Light street church, and heard Dr. Coke's sermon on that occasion. I also was a witness of and a participant in the wonderful revival which prevailed in Baltimore during that General Conference. People fell under the mighty influence that rested upon them as they walked the streets. After the General Conference closed I attended the Philadelphia Conference at Smyrna (then Duck Creek,) where the revival work went forward with great power. It extended, in fact, over the whole peninsula. When I traveled Annamessex circuit, in 1801, with William Colbert, we received eight hundred persons into the church in that circuit alone.

Methodism was very prosperous on the peninsula in that day, and included among its members many of the first people of that section. Dr. White, Harry Ennalls, Gov. Bassett, of Delaware, an eminent lawyer and judge, and a member of Congress in 1787. Dr. Sellers and others, gave influence and strength to the denomination in those early times. The social position of our church has hardly been relatively higher anywhere in this country at any time in its history than it was in the peninsula in the beginning of this century. That region furnished many of our best and most successful preachers in the days when there were giants among us; for truly there were giants in those days. Among the great men of that period was Dr. Chandler, a man of commanding intellect, of large executive capacity, a powerful preacher, a mighty evangelist, greatly successful in winning souls. Jesse Lee, one of the church's noblest and brightest names, was then in his ripe maturity, and lost the bishopric by only one vote at the first General Conference I attended. I was with him in his last hours, heard his rapturous and triumphant utterances as he met his final foe, and at his own request I closed his eyes after the great soul had departed. William Colbert, one of my early colleagues, was a man of low stature but of high usefulness, indefatigable in labor, and among the first in success.

That portion of my life in which I was the traveling companion of Bishop Asbury has probably the most public interest, because I was in that capacity the representative of the denomination at large, and was the most intimate and daily associate of a man, the purity and greatness of whose character, and the vastness and value of whose work must forever place him among the foremost servants of God and mankind.

Bishop Asbury chose me to be his traveling companion in the spring of 1808—which choice the Philadelphia Conference ratified—and I ceased traveling with him at the Conference of 1813, when he appointed me presiding elder of the Schuylkill district, which comprised the whole territory from Wilmington to Stroudsburg, between the Susquehanna and Delaware. My first tour with Bishop Asbury was from a point between Baltimore and Fredericktown, Md.—a spot historic in Methodism, Pike Creek, where Strawbridge built his log church—thence westward. We crossed the Alleghany mountains on our way, and the ascent occupied thirty-nine hours. I have since crossed the Alleghanies several times in express trains in a much shorter time. I had previously accompanied Asbury to the Alleghanies in 1803, where I left him to pursue his westward journey, while I returned to my work. Having passed the mountains, we made our way to Wheeling, and through Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, and thence pursued a southerly course, visiting the Conferences in the Southern States. During the western portion of this tour we visited the Territory of Indiana, which was a vast wilderness. We traveled in it thirty-six miles and saw in all that distance only six human habitations. Among the noted and worthy laymen whose acquaintance I formed, and by whom I was entertained on this my first journey with Bishop Asbury, were Gov. Tiffin and Gov. Worthington, both of Ohio, who were exemplary and devoted members and representatives of our church. During our progress through Tennessee we were joined by Bishop McKendree, who had just been elected a Bishop at Baltimore, and who was on his first episcopal tour. He accompanied us through the South, presiding with Asbury over the Southern Conferences.

I became acquainted with the Southern Methodist preachers at that time. Lovick Pierce, but a few years my junior, was then conspicuous for the purity and beauty of his character, and his popular talents as a preacher, and he yet lingers with me behind our beloved early colaborers who have gone on before. William Capers, beautiful in person and eloquent in speech, was at that time received on trial by the Conference. He was afterward one of the most distinguished men in our connection, and became a Bishop of the Church South after we were divided. The Southern Methodists at that time were remarkable for their spiritual fervor, and Christian friendliness and hospitality. There were among them many noble examples of the great virtues produced by our faith. I learned to love the South, and I have now fond memories of my friends whom I once cherished there. I knew the South when there was but one Methodism in America. I wept when in 1844 we were rent asunder; and now, as I stand amid the thronging memories of a century, I plead and pray that Methodism North and South may become one again. I am in some sense at least a representative of the fathers of the church, of the preachers and bishops who toiled and sacrificed to lay the strong foundations of our beautiful Zion, and I am sure I do not misrepresent them when in their name and as almost their sole survivor I plead for a united Methodism throughout this great land. This desire and prayer leaps strong and warm out of my heart, which, after beating for a hundred years, still beats as true and strong as ever for the welfare of the church to which its best love and zeal have been given.

During the first tour with Bishop Asbury I saw the Virginia Conference. It was composed of a fine body of men. There was one striking fact connected with it. Of the eighty-four members of the body, the two Bishops and the travelling companion of the Bishops, all were bachelors except three. Our early preachers were compelled to deny themselves largely of the pleasures and endearments of domestic life in order that they might do the work of evangelists and make full proof of their ministry. At this time I made the acquaintance of and was entertained by Edward Lee, at Petersburg, Va. He was a brother of Jesse Lee and father of the Rev. Dr. Leroy M. Lee, now and for a long time a distinguished representative of Southern Methodism.

From the Virginia Conference we proceeded over the Blue Ridge to Harrisonburg, where we attended the Baltimore Conference, thence to the Philadelphia Conference in St. George's, Philadelphia, Bishops Asbury and McKendree alternately presiding. Though attending all the Conferences, I was a member of this Conference and was at home again with my brethren. When my name was called in Conference the brethren said: "None but the Bishops can tell whether there is anything against Bro. Boehm." The Bishop rose and said with much gravity: "Nothing against Bro. Boehm." This Conference has given many noble and industrious ministers and laymen to the church.

After the Philadelphia Conference we proceeded onward through New Jersey, which Bishop Asbury had not visited for twenty-five years, and we missed our way in the pines, and, reaching a church where the Bishop had an appointment to preach, we found that as a result of our delay the services had been commenced by the preacher in charge of the circuit. The house was crowded. Bishop Asbury immediately entered the pulpit, and, after talking a brief time, he stepped backward and said: "I cannot preach, Henry; you must get up and preach." I immediately rose and the passage came to my mind: "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." If the passage had not come to my mind I should have been dumb, but as it was I preached from it and had a good time. After I finished, the Bishop arose and delivered a warm exhortation. This was in the coast region of south Jersey, in 1809.

Proceeding toward New York, we were joined by Bishop McKendree again at Elizabeth, and at Elizabethport we saw for the first time a steamboat. It excited our curiosity. We passed on to Powles Hook, now Jersey City. Here for the first time I saw the noble Hudson, and crossed it to New York, where we met the Conference in John Street church. Bishop McKendree was then first introduced to the New York Conference. I traveled many hundreds of miles with McKendree during my five years' journeyings with Asbury, and heard him preach probably at least a hundred times. He was a very powerful preacher. He often preached great sermons, and seldom preached a poor one.

From the New York Conference we proceeded to New England, attending the only Conference in that section; after which we proceeded again on our Western and Southern tour. But it is impossible for me on this occasion to recount the many scenes and events I witnessed during my long journeyings with that great man whose memory is ever green in my heart.

It was my office to attend upon and minister to him for five years. I frequently lifted him upon his horse and helped him to alight. I gave him his medicine when he was sick, and watched with him at night. It was my privilege to attend Bishop Whatcoat in his last illness, at Gov. Bassett's, in Delaware, in 1806. I have been personally acquainted with all our Bishops, from Coke to Peck, but to none have I been so endeared as to Bishop Asbury. I guarded him in his journeys when it was unsafe for him to be without a companion, and I shared with him the perils of the wilderness.

In North Carolina, coming on from Wilmington toward Newbern, Bishop Asbury's horse became frightened and ran away. He was in a sulky and I was on horseback. I suffered great apprehension of mind, not knowing what to do. I did not dare to pursue after him lest I should increase the horse's fright, and so add to the Bishop's peril. I began to pray—and if ever I prayed I prayed then—that God would deliver the Bishop from the destruction with which he was threatened. Suddenly the horse stopped, and became quiet and docile; and I rode up to the Bishop and found him in much trepidation, but safe and thankful.

The Lord is good—a stronghold in the day of trouble, and he knoweth them that trust in him. As I attended and guarded and nursed Asbury, so am I attended, nursed and tenderly cared for by my beloved daughter in my weakness and age. My hope is bright, and I expect soon to meet my colaborers on high.

The last of my dear friends who have preceded me was the Rev. Dr. Wakeley, my intimate associate for many years. He was to me a true and loving friend. He was with me on my last birthday, and participated in the service when I preached my centennial sermon at the last session of the Newark Conference. He then expected to be here to-day, but he is not here—he has gone on before. I shall see him soon, and Asbury and others dear to me,

Where the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Their Savior and brethren transported to greet;
And anthems of rapture eternally roll,

Religious Intelligence.

—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says that secessions from the Catholic to the Orthodox Greek Church continue on a large scale in Russian Poland.

—The chief of the Delaware Indians is said to be a Baptist minister, and of 1,000 persons composing his congregation 330 are members of his church.

—The Methodist churches in Sweden which have received and are still receiving aid from the American Bible Society have determined to solicit funds for the society in the future.

—A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate says the children of the Methodist Episcopal Church give more to missions than the entire Methodist Episcopal Church South.

—The American Home Missionary Society's last year was a year of financial success. The aggregate cash receipts were $398,896.82, or $14,329.96 in advance of the highest aggregate ever reached by the society in any year of its history.

—The Baptists of Kentucky have secured nearly $200,000 as their quota of the endowment fund of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary to be located at Louisville. Rev. Dr. J. P. Boyce has secured liberal subscriptions from the citizens.

—At a recent meeting of the Royal Geographical Society of England Sir Henry Rawlinson and other members referred to the death of the Rev. Charles New, the Methodist missionary in Africa, as a great loss not only to the Geographical Society, but also to the cause of Christianity.

—We understand, says the Watchman, that at the meeting of the committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, held recently, it was announced that the income of the society for the year is upward of £184,000. Nearly £20,000 arises from legacies and lapsed annuities. But on the regular receipts from ordinary resources there has been a very encouraging increase.

—The old South Society of Boston, at its annual meeting, voted an appropriation of $60,000 to finish the new church. This church will be one of the finest edifices in New England, and will cost, exclusive of land, $457,000. The annual income from rentals was reported at $33,000. The able and efficient pastor, Rev. Dr. Manning, is to have a salary of $6,000, with the use of the parsonage.

—The conversion to Protestant Christianity of twelve Rajout Mohammedans in India, during the past year, gave rise, for the time, to a bitter controversy as to the right of the Christians to the use of the wells. The matter has been recently settled by a decision from three distinguished Mohammedan doctors of the Punjaub, to the effect that it is lawful for a Mohammedan to eat and drink with Christians, and to draw water out of the same well with them.

—The fiftieth anniversary of the American Tract Society was held recently in Philadelphia. According to the annual report, during the half century now closed, 10,000,000 publications have been issued, and of them more than 500,000 were volumes. Two hundred and twenty colporteurs were employed last year at a cost of $50,000. Grants of publications were made to the amount of $45,000, and also of other gifts $11,000. More than 4,000 publications have been issued abroad, in 143 languages, and since the society was organized it has expended more than $600,000 in co-operating with American missions.

—The London Watchman reports a very interesting meeting of leading laymen held in Manchester, April 15, to arrange for the erection of a denominational building on one of the principal streets (Oldham) of the city, containing a chapel for daily religious services, a reading-room, library, a memorial hall, and offices for Wesleyan societies. It was proposed to erect a building that would honor the body for whose official and religious purposes it is to be provided, and it was justly urged that the undertaking, when brought to a completion, would be a lasting blessing to Methodism in Lancashire and the connection at large.

Our Young People.

TRUSTING EVER.

BY JANE DIXON.

The prophet was weary
Of wandering far,
But faith shone within him
As clear as a star;
Around him spread silence
Her shadowy shroud,
Yet through it there glimmered
One rose-colored cloud.

All lonely looked Cherith;
The sun had gone down,
And night gazed on twilight
With ominous frown;
Dark spirits were coming
The harp of the wind,
They wailed like a token
Of woe to mankind.

The faith of Elijah
Glowed steadfastly on,
Though his feeble flesh fainted,
And comfort seemed gone;
He watched for the ravens,
And swift through the air
They flew to the desert,
And nourished him there.

Oh, children of sorrow,
Long shaken by fears,
"Be careful for nothing,"
And say ye through your tears:
Have faith in the ravens!
The Father of all
Still hears his own people,
And answers their call.

A Letter from Grandpa Goodale.

THE FLORENCE FUND.

To all Readers of Our Young People's Column in the ADVOCATE:

You noticed in "our column," a few weeks ago, that "Florence," of Shreveport, sent me $1 to be presented to some "Nannie Trousdale," if I could find one. This act, small as it may seem to some of you, touched my young-old heart very tenderly, and made me desire very much to make the best possible use of this dollar. Perhaps you know that there are many more people in the world, old as well as young, who will desire to do a really charitable act than who will really do it. Now Florence is the kind of a girl who goes right to the root of the matter at once, instead of wasting time in talking about it. She sent the dollar. I confess I was a little disappointed at receiving the picture of George Washington—though he was a very great man, and told the truth about the cherry-tree—instead of the picture of Florence herself, which all of us "young folks" were so anxious to have. But when the dollar came I determined to put it to the very best possible use. So I called a council of war, and Tom and Harry and Charlie each had their suggestions to make; but none of them seemed to meet my strong desire to make this dollar do the work of fifty. But in Our Missionary of June, which came to hand this morning, I found a suggestion that seems to cover the case exactly. It is in these words:

"Will any Sunday school undertake the support of a girl or boy at a boarding school in China, $50 annually, for six years? If so, they may give a name they may select to the girl or boy supported by them, and receive semi-annual reports from the missionary in charge of the school."

I told the children—the other children I mean—that this was the very plan. We will make Florence's dollar the nucleus of a fund to be called the "Florence fund," and call for names of forty-nine more children, of all ages, each of whom will send to the editor of the ADVOCATE $1, and when the number is complete we will call a "council of war" (war against evil, you know) again and decide whether the choice shall be a boy or a girl, and what the name shall be. Now who will respond? All you Toms and Harries and Charlies and Florences that have young hearts, charged brim full of love for God's work, send in your names and your dollars for the "Florence fund."

But Tom, who is very careful, as you know, and exact about everything, wants to know how about the six years. He is afraid to look so far ahead. Well, my boy, if next year or the year after you find you cannot raise a dollar, or—yes, I will even say if you don't want to do so—just write to Grandpa Goodale and tell him so, and he will find some one else to pay it. Why can't the readers of "Our Young People's column" support and educate a missionary as well as a Sunday school? Come! We wait for your names and your dollars; and here is one from

GRANDPA GOODALE.

Up, Down and On.

A STORY FOR SLEEPY THREE-YEAR-OLDS.

BY EDWARD AGBOTT.

Once there was a ship, a large, beautiful ship, sailing over the blue sea. The ship had tall and tapering masts, and white and glistening sails. And the winds blew against the sails, and the sails bore against the masts, and the masts bore upon the ship, and the ship glided on through the waves, on and on and on and on.

Down in the water, under the ship, there was a great fish swimming along. While he was wondering what that black-bottomed thing was moving through the water above him a sailor let down a long line. On the end of the line was tied a sharp hook, and on the sharp hook was a piece of bait, and the baited hook floated right before the fish's mouth. Then the fish gave a bite, but while he caught the bait the hook caught him, and the sailor began to pull him up. And he pulled and pulled—and pulled—and pulled; up and up—and up—and up, higher and higher—and higher—and higher—

Are you asleep yet?

No? Not yet?

Well, up in the air above the ship there was flying a bird, a great heavy bird, with monstrous flapping wings, and a long hooked beak. While he was wondering what that white-capped thing was moving over the water below him a sailor on the deck leveled his gun and fired. Whiz went the bullet through the air and struck the bird, and down he began to fall. And he fell and fell—and fell—and fell; down and down—and down—and down; lower and lower—and lower—and lower—

Asleep yet?

No?

Not quite.

Well, on sailed the ship, on and on; blown by the winds, rocked by the waves; first this way, and then that way—now up—and now down—over here—and over there; rolling—and rocking; pitching—and pinging; on and on—and on—and on—

Now are you asleep?

Yes.

Hush—h—h, then.—Congregationalist.

Stockings.

Once upon a time people did not know what a tight-fitting knitted stocking was; they wore hose, or trowsers made of cloth, that buttoned at the ankle, and never thought of dressing each foot by itself.

But when people began to think more of dress they went to the tailor's to make them a pair of stockings, and he brought some like the gaiters little children wear now.

At last a king of England had a fine pair of knitted black silk stockings sent him from Spain. He thought himself so grand in them that he only wore them at state balls.

When his daughter became Queen Elizabeth she also had a present sent to her of a pair of knitted silk stockings (or silk shanks, as they were called,) which she liked so much that she would wear no other kind, and gave a great price to get some more like them. The nobles of her court wished they could buy some too; but they were very scarce, for no one in England could make them, until a young man borrowed some silk stockings, and knitted a pair like them in wool, which he sold to the Earl of Pembroke. These were the first woolen stockings made in England.

In the hot countries of the East people leave their slippers, shoes or boots at the door when they enter a room, and keep on their head-dress, just the opposite to what we Europeans do. We take off our hat, and keep on our boots; but then we must remember that these people do not sit in chairs, but on mats or cushions, with their feet doubled up under them; so that they would make their clothes dirty, and find their seat very uncomfortable at the same time. The Turks, who are not Christians, but followers of Mohammed, do not allow any one to enter their mosques, or holy shrines, with shoes on, as they consider it a mark of disrespect. As they wear long, loose garments, you would not notice whether they had stockings on or not; and as in these hot climates folks bathe a great many times a day, this easy style of going about with only a loose pair of slippers on, and no stockings to trouble about, must save the lazy Orientals some exertion.

This explains why Moses, the great law-giver, put off his shoes when he stood before the burning bush from whence the Lord spoke to him. He knew it was holy ground, and this was his way of showing respect.—Little Folks.

THE WARNING CRY.—I was returning from Soenpoh, a great plain about forty miles from Ningpo, where we have out-stations; and I reached the city of Z-ky'i (where also we have a mission chapel) at about ten o'clock at night. Riding through the dark streets in a sedan chair I overtook a young man and a boy, the boy about ten years of age. The young man had a deep-toned gong, which he struck three times; and then the boy, with a loud, mellow and long-sustained voice (such as I have seldom heard in China,) shouted out: "Oh, o, o, tsiao ho cohjin!"—that is to say: "Oh, oh; oh! Take care of fire and candle! Oh!" So they went gonging and shouting through the streets of the city. The reason was that, from the long-continued drouth, fires were frequent; and so these lads were engaged by some benevolent gentleman to go about warning the people of their danger of carelessness with fire. It struck me that all Sunday school children, whether they have loud voices or no, can do something better than that Chinese lad did; and by prayer or work, money or collections, or by giving themselves to preach in God's good time, warn the dwellers in a world which, with all that it contains, shall be burned up, to "flee from the wrath to come."—Macedonian.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL.—This means more than that we must not take what belongs to others; we should always take care of the property of others.

A boy once ran half a mile trying to stop a stranger whose trunk was in danger of being lost from the carriage. That was according to the eighth commandment.

Farmer Bolt turned the cattle out of neighbor Heck's field, fixed the fence a little, and then left word at the house. And this was according to the commandment: Go thou and do likewise.

MR. EDITOR: The Sunday school children generally are very anxious about the milk in the bays' nest. Tell Grandpa Goodale to stick to his text, and not to scatter so much; and if there is any milk in the bays' nest, to let the children have it.

Missions in Catholic Countries.

In England and in the United States Catholicism is reached for the most part only in an indirect way by Protestant agencies. The number of converts from the Roman religion is not great. Our Protestant churches, especially in the large cities, are surrounded by Catholic people, our preaching, Sunday schools and pastoral work are going on in their midst, and our schools and colleges are operating in easy access, but not much seems to be done in affecting this class of the population. The Catholic people in this country are more under the control of the priesthood, and more completely hedged about and isolated from evangelical influences, than in almost any other country in the world. Romanism in America has not yet revealed its true character as fully as elsewhere, and it has not borne those fruits which have led to its decay and loss of power in Mexico, South America and Europe. Our free institutions, popular education and general enlightenment have had their influence, and it is doubtful whether the growth of Catholicism in the United States is equal to the actual immigration of Catholic-born people to the country. We have no doubt the time will come when the Protestant churches will gather large results here at home from evangelical efforts directed to the conversion of Catholics.

The first reaction from Romanism is to indifference and infidelity. Ignorant of the Bible and of evangelical truth, the corruptions, errors and superstitions of Rome naturally lead to skepticism and the rejection of all religion. This is the fact in Italy, Spain, and especially in Mexico. Protestantism finds the people in these countries drifting into atheism, materialism and rationalistic views. The effect of ages of Roman teaching and Jesuitical intermeddling with national affairs and domestic relations has been to unsettle all religious belief, and, among the more intelligent classes, to bring Christianity into suspicion and contempt. Catholicism, though waning, and stripped of its former power with the governments, is not dead, but is moving with stealthy steps, and with adroit and carefully-laid plans. It is a great thing in itself that Protestantism is tolerated in countries that have for centuries been under the yoke of Rome. The field is open, but the work of evangelization has great obstacles to surmount. A measure of present success may be realized, but there are many adversaries, and there will be need of patience and persevering effort. As between the Latin races and their Catholic civilization, and such pagan countries as India and China, the former may be more open to the gospel, and more readily brought to Christ, but we must not underrate the obstacles to be overcome.

The time has fully come to give the gospel to Mexico and to Brazil, and to organize and strengthen Protestant missions in all the Central and South American States. As Catholicism is losing its hold, a pure evangelism must be supplied before there is a return toward Rome, or the final abandonment of Christianity altogether. It is the set time, the opportune hour to move vigorously southward, and to meet the tide that is rising against the dominion of the papal hierarchy. We shall be criminally obtuse if we do not discern the signs of the times, and enter the open doors to which the finger of Providence unmistakably points.

In view of the need of fit men for these fields, the young men in our colleges and theological schools, preparing for the ministry, should study Spanish, French and Portuguese, and thoroughly post themselves in the history and literature of Catholicism, and its methods and agencies. We have three Mexican young men at college in this country. This is a beginning, but we ought to have a hundred. We must prepare for the work of missions in Catholic countries with patience and care. The results will be manifest after awhile. It is not a work of romance, of novelty, of sight-seeing, but of hard, self-denying labor for Christ. Men offering for Brazil and other distant fields should prepare themselves, and consecrate their lives to this special work. Nothing requires more circumspection than the organization and manning of missions in the regions we have under consideration. The men that offer are not always the men to be sent. The fit man may have to be sought. Our ideal of a foreign missionary is that of a first-class man every way. He should be well educated, thoroughly informed, with administrative capacity, a discerner of spirits in his intercourse with men, and, withal, possessed of an absorbing consecration—a Pauline faith and enthusiasm.

There should be no discouragement on account of seeming slowness in the progress of the gospel. Mexico will not be evangelized in a day. It may take fifty years to plant pure Christianity, so that it shall have self-sustaining roots and boughs that shall cover the land. If we go to Brazil let us go to stay, with the conviction that neither this generation nor the next may witness a complete triumph. Good will be done beyond all it costs as we go along, and the foundations of an ultimate conquest will have been laid. As in all mission enterprises, this must have its day of small things. Obstacles peculiar to it will be developed, but it is our duty to begin and to heed the loud call of Christ to preach his gospel where the conditions of success are most encouraging. Our men should be sent to fields which promise results, and our money should be expended to the best advantage in bringing the world to Christ.

But, after all, our business is more with duty than success. It is for us to give the gospel to the world, to preach it to every creature. Here our responsibility begins and ends. Whether the world shall ever be converted or not has little to do with the account which we must render. Our marching orders are clear, and by them we shall be judged. Money is greatly needed. The missions we have are terribly straitened, crippled for lack of means. The appropriation by our board to Mexico is not half enough, and no appropriation whatever could be risked for Brazil. Read Bro. Newman's interesting communication in the ADVOCATE of last week, and see how favorable the opening is, how pressing the demand. God in his providence has prepared the way. There are people waiting and asking for the gospel. The board is right in not anticipating its receipts and in declining to go in debt. But we must raise more money for foreign missions. Our people must read more on this subject, pray more, and the obligation to give liberally must be pressed home upon the conscience. With all due allowance for our poverty, and the stringency of the times, the sad fact remains that our interest in missions is far from being as hearty and earnest as it should be. There will be no lack of men and money when Christian people become imbued with the constraining love of Christ.

A Time of Peace.

If we were now living under the old Roman republic the temple of Janus might be shut. Such profound quiet has not prevailed in our country for many years. Even in political circles there is little apparent strife. Our long-distracted Southern States are wonderfully tranquil. The people are busy in their fields, and lawlessness and oppression are yielding to the better principles of industry and sobriety. There are unmistakable signs of increasing good will between the sections. Bitterness and animosity are gradually passing away. Wisdom, justice and moderation on the part of the North and South will in a few years, it is to be hoped, remove the last vestiges of intolerance and hatred.

The nations of the earth are generally at peace. The civil wars in Spain and Cuba continue, but these must shortly come to an end, and in any case their influence is not much felt beyond the immediate countries in which they are carried on.

Next year in this country will be a year of great political excitement. The presidential election will stir the whole nation, and the present quiet is the prelude of the gale. It will, however, be a political conflict, attended by speech-making, conventions, platform constructions, and the public mind will be wrought up to the highest pitch of fervor. The peace of Europe, it is thought by many, will not last long. It is suspected that France, under the MacMahon government, is arming for the purpose of revenge upon Germany, and in behalf of the Church of Rome. The Ultramontane Catholics would be glad to see the power of Germany broken, and to witness the humiliation and overthrow of Bismarck. The undercurrent of affairs in Europe is strongly religious. Papal intrigue and Jesuitical craft are at work, and when the outbreak comes this feature of the complication will doubtless be manifested. The volcano is only temporarily in repose. The fires are burning far below the surface, and at any time the lava may overflow and carry death and devastation far and wide. A long peace is scarcely possible in Europe. So long as Russia, Germany, Austria and England maintain a good understanding, tranquility may be maintained, but war at no distant time is almost certain. It is now a time of peace most remarkable in the history of the world.

A favorable time it should be for the arts of peace, and especially for the progress of the gospel of peace. The whole world seems ripe and waiting for the sickle of truth. There is peace political, national and world-wide, but the war with sin goes on. The tares are being sown, the devil is not idle, and the mystery of iniquity is at work. When political and national questions excite the public mind the churches are usually more alert and watchful. While peace has its advantages, and in many respects is favorable to the advancement of the gospel, it has also its dangers. There is the temptation to relax vigilance and effort, and to fall into a comparative quiescence in the work of God.

German Student Life.

Dr. T. O. Summers, Jr., is writing some excellent "Notes from Germany" to the Nashville Christian Advocate. The following extract concerning German student life will be read with interest:

The German student is a psychological peculiarity. There is nothing like him in the world. Once registered or matriculated at the university in Berlin, and most of the universities in northern Germany, the student is no longer under the jurisdiction of the city, so far as orderly conduct is concerned. He is amenable only to the University Court for civil offenses, and is punished by confinement in the university prison. Thus, to begin with, the university is a realm within itself, and the student is to that extent differentiated from the outside world. Among those whose object is really to work, and carry off the degrees of the university, there exists a fellow-feeling which makes them wondrous kind. This class may generally be known by their little blue-back lecture-books, without which, during the day, you will rarely see them on the street. But there is another class of students who do not come to learn, but to spend money and to fight. You can recognize them by their uniform, which indicates the verein or club to which they belong. It is utterly inconceivable how grown-up men can make such fools of themselves as do the members of these clubs. The sole object of their organization is to fight. They use for weapons the rapier generally, sometimes the saber. The breast is defended by an impenetrable cover, the eyes are also protected, the arms bandaged, and the hands gloved. They fight for twenty minutes, or until one is so wounded that he is judged hors de combat. You can at any time on the streets see the scarred faces of the heroes, so called, who bear proudly these marks of honor.

The intercourse between professors and students is very limited, as from the nature of the case it must be. Hence, says Prof. Hyrtyl, of Vienna, "the larger universities of Germany are not the places for those who wish to learn anatomy." The same remark applies to other branches. The student here must be already well versed in his subject to be much benefited by the lectures of the professor. I will give you one example. As Prof. Virchow was lecturing, a few days ago, he came to a point in his subject upon which he questioned those students who were near him. I did not expect them to answer, as he had said nothing in the whole course concerning the point in question. On their failure to do so, however, he seemed vexed, and said, rather petulantly: "Gentlemen, have you studied nothing at all about anatomy?" The student who succeeds here must do his own work—he receives very little help from the professor.

The number of Auslander or foreign students is on the increase every year. I am pleased to find that the Americans are so well received. It is said—and from what I have seen I am satisfied that it is so—that they are the best students in the university. They mingle but little with each other generally, and confine themselves closely to their work.

Dissipation is rare among the students of the German universities. It is true they drink beer freely, but I have never seen a student in the least intoxicated. Their respect for authority is proverbial, and the neatness which strikes every one who enters these halls bespeaks the orderly and gentlemanly demeanor of those who frequent them. No smoking is allowed, and nobody chews in Germany—that is, no decent gentleman, so far as I have seen. My next I will send from Vienna, where I now close this.

The American Cardinal and His Work.

"The office or dignity of a cardinal is not now what it once was; it no longer brings with it wealth or powers, or great influence in the world. It has no longer anything in it that can justly excite the jealousy or the envy of kings or princes or people. It is an office of dignity, which is in these days, I may say, a post of danger. He who is now appointed cardinal, in receiving that great and high office has assumed great and heavy burdens, and among the first of the duties that he has to fill is that when the day of trial or the day of danger comes he must show himself in the vanguard. (Applause.) And I may say, in the sentiments expressed by my eminent brother not long since, Cardinal Archbishop Manning (applause,) that it is for the very reasons I have just alluded to that I accept more readily and more freely the dignity conferred upon me. (Applause.")

We quote the above from a speech of Cardinal McCloskey, made on the occasion of the magnificent reception given to him and to the papal legation, a few days ago, at Delmonico's in this city. Just what the "trials" and the "dangers" are the cardinal did not state. Perhaps we must find them in the preparations now going forward for an onslaught upon the Protestant institutions in this country. The following text of the oath taken by the Roman Catholic cardinals previous to their installation, and quoted from a copy furnished by the British minister at Turin, may not be without interest in this connection:

"I, ——, Cardinal of the holy Roman Church, do promise and swear, from this time to my life's end I will be faithful and obedient unto St. Peter, the holy apostolic Roman Church, and our most holy lord, the Pope, and his successors, canonically and lawfully elected; that I will give no advice, consent or assistance against the pontifical majesty and person; that I will never knowingly or advisedly, to their injury or disgrace, make public the counsels intrusted to me by themselves, or by messengers or letters (from them;) also that I will give my assistance in retaining, defending and recovering the Roman papacy and the regalia of Peter, all my might and endeavor, so far as the rights and privileges of my order will allow it, and will defend against all their honor and state; that I will direct and defend, with due form and honor, the legates and nuncios of the apostolic see, in the territories, churches, monasteries and other benefices committed to my keeping, and I will cordially co-operate with them, and treat them with honor in their coming, abiding and returning, and that I will resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who shall attempt anything against them; that I will by every way and every means strive to preserve, augment and advance the rights, honors, privileges, the authority, of the holy Roman Bishop, our lord the Pope, and his before-mentioned successors; and that at whatever time anything shall be decided to their prejudice, which is out of my power to hinder, as soon as I shall know that any steps or measures have been taken (in the matter) I will make it known to the same our lord, or his before-mentioned successors, or to some other person by whose means it may be brought to their knowledge. That I will keep and carry out, and cause others to keep and carry out, the rules of the holy father, the decrees, ordinances dispensations, reservations, provisions, apostolic mandates and constitutions of the holy Pontiff Sixtus, of happy memory, as to visiting the thresholds of the apostles at certain prescribed times, according to the tenor of that which I have just read through. That I will seek out and oppose [persecute and fight against; Latin: omni conatu persecuturum et impugnaturum] heretics, schismatics against the same our lord the Pope, and his before-mentioned successors, with every possible effort."

The remainder of the oath provides in detail not to sell or give away, or otherwise alienate, any church property without due authority; to maintain the "constitution of the blessed Pius" of 1567, and the declarations of his successors, particularly those of Innocent the Ninth, 1591, and those of Clement the Eighth, 1592. It also engages to maintain the papal claims to various Italian cities, and closes with the words: "I will not seek absolution from any of the foregoing articles, but reject it if it should be offered me [or in any way accept it if offered.] So help me God and these most holy gospels."—New York Christian Advocate.

East Mississippi Female College.

MR. EDITOR: The closing exercises of this institution of learning, June 6-11, were very good, and gave general satisfaction. The examinations of the various classes were thorough, and evinced fine training and close application on the part of the pupils. The essays of the young ladies were rhetorical, logical, practical, and equal to many of those who make greater pretensions in composition. The exhibition on Tuesday evening manifested thorough preparation, and was witnessed by a large and appreciative audience. The musical and vocal concert, under the direction of the accomplished Mrs. J. S. Malone, was a brilliant success. The address of Hon. T. H. Woods, delivered on Thursday evening to the graduating class, we did not have the pleasure of hearing, but have learned that it was original, profound, novel and eloquent (the theme was lying—rather a departure from the old beaten track,) but was well received and enthusiastically applauded. Thus the college has reflected great honor upon herself, and is taking rank with our best female colleges. It is under the auspices of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but is not sectarian. Its president, Rev. J. W. Adkisson, brings to the great work of female education long experience in the art of teaching, a well-disciplined and fully-stocked mind, and a hearty love of his noble profession. The college is located in Meridian, Miss., a town noted in east Mississippi for its health, beauty, and social and religious advantages, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and at the junction of several other railroads running in various directions, and is convenient of access from all parts of the surrounding country.

THE BOARDING DEPARTMENT,

under the supervision of Mrs. Annie Adkisson, is most excellent; and by her kind words, as well as by her motherly attention to the young ladies intrusted to her care, in health as well as in sickness, she makes the college to them a pleasant home.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The curriculum embraces all the departments of science and literature taught in female colleges. We cannot do better than to give the president's own words in this behalf, as set forth in his annual catalogue: "The course has been adopted upon the suggestion of long experience and candid respect for the scholarship and educational dignity of the pupil and teacher. While especial attention is given to the primary and practical branches, it is intended that pupils graduating to the various degrees shall be worthy of the honor conferred, and that their educational attainments shall be equal to the best." The college is every way worthy of patronage, and expenses are very reasonable. The prospects are very flattering for an increase in pupils next session, which will commence September 13. Parents and guardians should have their girls ready to enter the first day of the session. Send for a catalogue. Address Rev. J. W. Adkisson, Meridian, Miss.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.—It is now two years or more since the committee representing the patronizing Conferences has met. It was thought by the publisher, and by the local executive committee, that the Seashore camp ground would be a convenient and agreeable place, as most of the members are likely to be in attendance at the camp meeting. The second day of the camp meeting, Thursday, July 22, has been designated. We trust that there will be a full attendance.

AT THE recent commencement of Soule University, Chappell Hill, Texas, the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon Rev. I. G. John, editor of the Galveston Christian Advocate, and Rev. H. V. Phillpott, of the Texas Conference. Most worthily bestowed.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

THE notice of the Tuskaloosa Female College came too late for insertion. Sorry we could not be there.

KEEP THE ADVOCATE IN THE FAMILY.—In an obituary of an estimable Christian lady, received a few days ago, the writer says: "She did not forget the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. In consequence of the failure of crops for the last two years Bro. Quinn had spoken of discontinuing the paper, but she asked him to renew his subscription and keep the ADVOCATE in the family." We are prepared to believe all the excellent things said about that sister. She lived usefully, and died in peace. As Wesley said of the Methodist people, so say we of our subscribers: They die well. That was a request worth making, even in a dying hour: "Keep the ADVOCATE in the family." Yes, keep it in the family. Let a great many other things go before you stop the ADVOCATE. It will be a blessing to the household—to husband and children—when the sainted wife and mother is gone. Keep it in the family. No well-regulated Christian family can afford to do without a religious paper. Don't stop it even when you die, but leave it as a boon to your children.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.—Our readers are referred to the notice on the eighth page for programme of the commencement exercises of Centenary College, Jackson, La. Commencement sermon, Sunday, July 11, will be preached by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. Rev. C. W. Carter delivers the address to the literary societies on commencement day, July 13. We expect the friends of this old and popular institution will be out in great force. For numbers, for talent, beauty and hospitable entertainment the commencements at Centenary have always been noted. The coming commencement will doubtless be among the best in the history of this old institution. The board of trustees meets on Monday, July 12. A full attendance is desired.

THE PRAYER TEST AND THE GRASSHOPPERS.—The grasshoppers threatened a sore visitation to Missouri this spring. The farmers fought them in every way, but were worsted in the conflict. In this extremity the Governor of Missouri issued his proclamation, inviting the people to pray to God to help when man could do nothing. The recommendation was ridiculed by many of the daily papers with the choicest wit. But soon afterward the rains came to the help of the farmers, and to the discomfiture of the grasshoppers and the witty editors. A correspondent of the Western Recorder calls attention to the fact that the same number of the Cincinnati Commercial contained an editorial ridiculing the people for beseeching the God who rules the powers of nature to remove the plague, and a telegram announcing its cessation. The best commentary on the late rains is found in the following text: "If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people; if my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."—Second Chronicles vii, 13, 14.—Christian Observer.

THE Bishop of the diocese of northern Texas writes:

"The church has but three tabernacles in all my jurisdiction! I am thus compelled to borrow the buildings of some of the many denominations by which this country is possessed and overrun."

Has the good Bishop never heard certain advice about not looking a gift-horse in the mouth, or abusing the bridge that carries you over? No doubt these non-conformist "meeting-houses" are pests, but so long as they are placed at the disposal of the Bishop would an acknowledgment of the courtesy be out of place, and would it not be in quite as good taste as to speak of other denominations than his own as he does? "I pray your courtesy," says Sir Reginald. If he had said that at this day to the Texan Bishop, would not Sir Reginald be a very foolish fellow?—Christian at Work.

THE GOSPEL MEETINGS IN MEMPHIS.—On Sunday night last, at the Exposition building, says the Western Methodist of June 19, Mr. Whittle preached his closing discourse to an immense audience—estimated to be five thousand persons—and it was an occasion of absorbing religious interest. These meetings, we believe, have done great good—how much will be known only in eternity. We glorify God's grace, and pray that his blessings may ever be upon his servant who has so faithfully delivered the gospel message to the people of our city. Daily prayer meetings are still in progress at the Court Street Cumberland Presbyterian church, and we hope the good work of God will continue to advance among us.

On Monday last Mr. Whittle left for Little Rock, where, we trust, his labors will be crowned with signal success.

WE HAVE RECEIVED an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Carnatz Institute. The exercises are to be held at Minerva Hall, in this city, on Thursday, June 24, at seven o'clock P. M. Judge Thomas Cooley presents the diplomas.

THE furnace of affliction is often the means which Heaven uses to purify the soul from the dross of pride and sensuality.

Books and Periodicals.

BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON AND TEA. By Marion Harland, New York.

A fine book for housekeepers, and very agreeably written. Along with cooking and housekeeping duties there are reflections and stories to diversify the scene and to entertain the reader. A good many passages seem to be designed for the instruction of husbands in their duties. It may be well for the heads of families to buy the book for their wives and daughters, and to read some parts of it themselves. A handsome volume of 459 pages, with copious index. For sale by Eyrich, Canal street, New Orleans.

GERMAN FOUR PART SONGS FOR MIXED VOICES, WITH ENGLISH WORDS. Edited by N. H. Allen. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

This is a volume of 151 pages, and contains 126 songs with the notes. The selections are from the works of the most eminent modern German composers. Those interested in part songs will find this work one of great interest and value.

THE Christian Messenger is the title of a new monthly paper published in this city. It is not sectarian, but devoted to the spread of evangelical truth, and the promotion of religion in the community. It is the organ of the Christian Mite Society, published by F. F. Hansell. The number for June has been received. It is creditable in appearance, and filled with profitable reading matter. We wish it success and great usefulness.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL for June has: The Bridge of Sighs; Bears; Illustrated; Evolution of Genius, Illustrated; Latin Pronunciation; The Great Desert, and other articles. Morton's Monthly is a periodical of solid merit, and should have a wide circulation. Published at Louisville, Ky. Price, $1.50.

OUR Sunday school periodicals for July are to hand—of good quality, and handsomely printed and illustrated. The Magazine is particularly good. The opening article, Counsels to Teachers, by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL. D., is excellent.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogue of the fortieth session (1874-75) of Randolph Macon College. We observe that there are two hundred and fifteen students, and that there are representatives of fifteen different States among them.

WIDE AWAKE is the title of a new magazine for girls and boys, published by D. Lathrop & Co.; Boston, and edited by Ella Farman. It is very handsomely illustrated, and filled with entertaining matter.

THE American Artisan for June is, as usual, replete with useful and latest information on scientific, mechanical and artistic subjects. The diagrams and drawings are numerous and valuable.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Philip Werlein, 81 Baronne street, New Orleans, for a piece of music entitled the Heart Song.

THE law for the reform of the church which was recently passed by the Mexican Congress contains the following provisions: All the Roman Catholic Church buildings are made the property of the State, and only a certain number are allowed to persons of the Roman Catholic faith in each city or town. Sunday is made a legal day of rest; public feast days are abolished; the Sisters of Charity are banished, and in the future no man or woman can wear a religious habit in the street; the clergy are forbidden to receive property or gifts of any description for services to the sick and dying, and all members of the church are given the same right of petition as bishops and other church dignitaries.

THE Tablet (Roman Catholic news paper of this city) says, and it is worth repeating:

"An immense preponderance of electoral power is in the hands of the Catholics of this city, so that their united action would secure the success of any party or any question on behalf of which it should be secured."

That is the game, and politicians understand it. The only safety for civil and religious liberty in this country is in the union of Protestant patriotic citizens against the enemies of freedom—the Romish priests and their subservient followers.—New York Observer.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request of a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they did not always have the amount at the close the year closed, they would pay up when they could, we were led to give notice to our agents and subscribers, about five years ago, that "no paper would be stopped without an explicit order." Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid always before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper do not direct the postmaster to return your paper. That will not stop it. Do not write upon it and return it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When you subscribe state that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so expressly order, send a postal card to reach us any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected these two simple methods and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter inclosing pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly then or you at once assured your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, heading the notice "second" or "third notice," when, on referring to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. But postmasters have been in many instances mistaken and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Attend to it yourself if you want it done, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

A GOOD SCHOOL.—One of the most thoroughly alive and vigorous educators we know of is the Rev. J. H. Braun, of Hiwassee College, seven miles from Sweetwater, in east Tennessee, near the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad. The Holston Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South has the care of this institution, which we think is a guarantee for its proper management. But to the vigor, energy and perseverance of the president they are doubtless indebted for the popularity of the institution and the extension of its patronage into thirteen States, the territory over which the ADVOCATE circulates, contributing a liberal share. See advertisement in another column.

WE ARE under obligations to Messrs. Chick & Co., 111 North Second street, St. Louis, for one of their "Patent Lightning Receiving Hip Churn and Egg Beaters." We see from the circular that this invention has taken the following premiums during the year 1874, viz: Large silver medal, Indiana State Fair; diploma, Iowa State Fair; diploma, Jerseyville, (Ill.) Fair; diploma, Pinetown (Miss.) Fair. We have tried it with entire success.

COTTON FACTORS.—Messrs. Joseph H. Wallis & Co., whose card appears in our issue today, are worthy of entire confidence as factors, and we heartily commend the firm to the attention of our readers. They have been for many years agents for Pratt's celebrated cotton gins, an advertisement of which will appear next week, when we shall have occasion to say more about the firm than we have room for at present.

BUSSEY & CO.—We take pleasure in recommending the above firm to our readers. It is constituted at present of Cyrus Bussey and L. H. Gardner. Both of these gentlemen are well and favorably known in business circles. Mr. Bussey, who is accustomed to business operations on a large scale, has passed through all the financial revulsions since the war unscathed. He has protected his creditors and patrons in business; and, as an evidence of the confidence and respect of the business men of the community, he has been chosen to represent them as president of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. L. H. Gardner, formerly of L. H. Gardner & Co., of this city, one of the largest and most popular wholesale dry goods establishments in the Southwest, is also well known throughout the South and Southwest. To those who have known the firm alluded to it would be superfluous to add a word; but to those not familiar with that firm we may add that Mr. Gardner enjoys an enviable reputation as a wide-awake and thoroughly competent business man of high-toned principles and liberal views. We think we hazard nothing in saying that the claims of this firm to public favor and confidence are of the highest order. Among our new advertisements will be found their business card as cotton factors and commission merchants, at 188 Gravier street.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—The traveling public are much indebted to the indomitable energy and skill of the general manager, Col. Frost, for so fully restoring this route to its original condition of security and good order. The trains leave daily, and travelers may be sure that the improvements of the facilities and provision for the comfort of passengers has kept pace with the most advanced enterprise of the country. Maj. S. E. Carey, general ticket agent, will be found to be a most courteous and obliging officer, a cultivated gentleman, and fully acquainted with the duties of his position.

BARGAINS FOR THE HARD TIMES.—We are informed that the Crescent Store, at No. 17 Bourbon street, is selling dry goods at surprisingly low figures. The advertisement appears in another column, headed "Dry Goods Sacrificed." Our readers will find the prices of some well-known and staple articles, which will enable them to form an idea of prices in general.

SCREWED AND SEWED BOOTS AND SHOES.—See the advertisement of Mr. John Kenz, No. 20 Royal street, in another column. Call and interview him as to prices, and see his stock and the character of his manufactured goods, which speak for themselves, and only require to be seen to be appreciated.

Farm, Garden and Household.

THE METHOD OF PRESERVING GRAPES.—A French vine-dresser preserves grapes through the entire winter, their freshness, beauty and savor remaining unimpaired even until the month of April. He for a long time kept secret the process, but has lately given it to the world. The grapes are left upon the vine as late as possible, care being had, however, to cut them before the first frost. The bunch, in cutting, is not detached from the stalk or cane, but the latter is cut so that the cluster has attached to it, after cutting, two or three knots and joints below the cluster and two above. The upper end is then covered with wax, to prevent the evaporation of the fluids contained within the pores of the wood. All grapes not absolutely healthy are carefully removed from the cluster, after which the lower end of the stock is thrust through the hole in a perforated cork, and down into a bottle filled with water. In the water is a little wood-charcoal, which prevents it from becoming impure. The cork is crowded into the mouth of the bottle as closely as possible, and then covered with sealing-wax around the stalk, so as to close the bottle, water and air-tight. The bottles are then placed upon tables or shelves in a dry chamber, in which the temperature never falls below the freezing-point. The bottles are supported in any convenient way, so as to prevent their being tipped over by the weight of the clusters, and are placed at such intervals that the bunches do not come in contact with each other. The bunches must be, from time to time, carefully examined, and such single grapes as show symptoms of spoiling must be removed.

RED MANGE.—Col. Sam Hatch's Remedy.—First rub the dog with a dry brush, tie him in a clean place, and then annoint him with a preparation made of equal portions of sulphur, lard and tar. To properly make the salve or ointment, melt the sulphur, lard and tar over a slow fire, stirring all the while, even after it has been taken from the coals, and until it has lost heat enough to allow you to put your hand into it without burning. Unless you stir in this wise the mixture will not be thorough. One, and at the furthest two, applications will cure the worst case of red mange. Col. Hatch also has a remedy for distemper, which he has used with great success for many years: Make the dog squat on his hind legs, then open his mouth and throw a handful of dry salt down his throat, following it with about a gill of water. The salt will make the dog vomit very freely, and will render him so miserable, for about two hours, that he will wish he were dead. But when he gets on his pins again no trace of the distemper will be left. Both of these are simple remedies, and they are perfectly safe.—Turf, Field and Farm.

REMEDY FOR THE POTATO-BUG.—The Buffalo Live Stock Journal, in answer to several inquiries as to the best remedy for this pest of the potato, says that, from trial of several different ones, it finds sulphuric acid (oil of vitriol,) diluted with fifty times its weight of water and sprinkled over the vines, a perfect remedy, killing the bugs and not injuring the vines. This is much safer than Paris green, as, after diluting as above, it is perfectly safe to handle, and may be sprinkled on with a common watering-pot. The acid is not always of the same strength, so a little caution seems necessary. The druggists' acid may take seventy parts of water. If the above remedy is harmless to the vines, and at the same time death to the bugs, we do not see why the application should not be valuable in the case of other insects which infest vegetation, both in the field and in the garden.

MOWING LAWNS.—Many lawns suffer by mowing too late in autumn, which exposes the roots of the grass to injury by the severe cold of winter. It is always best to allow the grass to grow several inches in length, and as cold weather approaches it lies flat and serves as a good protection. This is more particularly important in exposed places; under trees it is not necessary. Lawns are sometimes badly disfigured by top-dressing at this time of year with coarse manure, left in large lumps upon the surface. Old, well-pulverized manure or compost, which may be spread from the shovel like the sowing of seed, answers the purpose much better, and has not the strong and offensive odor of fresh manure. But if it becomes necessary to use the latter or none, break it up fine and spread it evenly with a steel rake in a small yard, or with a smoothing harrow on more extended grounds.

POULTRY DIET.—Cayenne pepper mustard or ginger can, with great benefit, be added to the food of fowls, to increase their vigor and stimulate egg production. This apparently artificial diet will be seen to be natural, if we remember that wild birds of the gallinaceous species get access to very many highly-spiced berries and buds—articles that give the "game flavor" to their flesh. The ordinary food of the domestic fowl is not indeed entirely without some such addition, since there is more or less of an aromatic principle in wheat, Indian corn and all other grains. Nevertheless, it is not sufficient in quantity to supply the place of the stronger spices, a taste for which is part of the fowl's inherited constitution. A moderate quantity of cayenne, etc., added to the ground grain is always productive of health and thrift in poultry.—Poultry World.

GERANIUMS ARE OBNOXIOUS TO SNAKES.—Every species of snakes may be permanently driven away from an infested place by planting geraniums. In South America the Caffir people thus rid their premises of snakes. A missionary of south Africa had his parsonage surrounded by a narrow belt of geraniums, which effectually protected the residence from any kind of snake. A few yards away from this geranium belt a snake would occasionally be found. It is well known that the whole geranium genus is highly redolent of volatile oils—lemon-scented, musk-scented and peppermint-scented. What, therefore, is a very pleasant nosegay for man is repugnant to the serpent tribe.—Rural Sun.

A TREE PROTECTOR.—There was on exhibition at the New England Fair, at Narragansett Park, a model of a very simple elastic guard for keeping horses from gnawing the bark from roadside trees. It is a simple pulling of slats to surround the trunk; but instead of being nailed to the tree or set on the ground to rot, it was suspended by elastic springs which would give as the body of the tree enlarges. We consider it well worthy the consideration of owners of roadside shade-trees. It is utterly absurd to spend time and money in planting trees along our streets, when the first horse that comes along is allowed to stop and leisurely make a dinner from the bark, while the owner is perhaps thoughtlessly smoking a cigar at a neighboring saloon. The invention, we believe, originates from Woonsocket, R. I.—New England Farmer.

TOMATO CATSUP.—Half a bushel ripe tomatoes, not peeled, one quart vinegar, one pound salt, quarter pound black pepper, twelve pods red pepper, quarter pound allspice, one ounce cloves, three boxes good mustard, a little garlic, if you have it, six onions, two pounds brown sugar, one handful peach leaves. Boil until the right consistency, being careful not to let it burn; then strain through a wire sieve when cool enough. I always have to rub it through. The ingredients are all put in together and thoroughly cooked. When done it will be pretty thick.

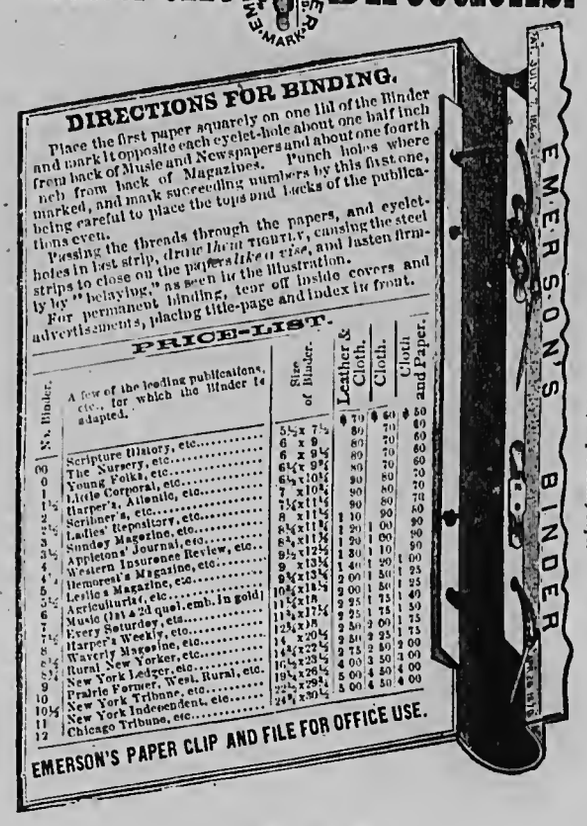
ATLANTA PAPER MILLS.

Read the EMERSON'S TRADE BELAYING THE CORD MARK BINDER Directions.



DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, being careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelet-holes in last strip, draw them TIGHTLY, causing the steel strips to close on the papers like a vise, and fasten firmly by "belaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and Index in front.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. HOLLAN BROTHERS,

Mississippi river and bayous	286
Red river	88
Railroads	401

Mobile	452
Texas	259
Total	1,631

On Saturday the market opened with a good feeling, inspired by Liverpool being steadier, and New York firm for spots and 1-16@1-16c. higher for futures. Factors consequently evinced increased confidence, and were stringent in their pretensions for middling to good middling inclusive, the demand running mostly on the former. Nothing transpired with regard to the medium and lower grades, except that low middling was firm, and the poorer qualities unchanged. The sales embraced 1,000 bales. On Monday the movement commenced under the encouraging influence of increased firmness at Liverpool, where the sales were 15,000 bales, against 10,000 on Saturday, and New York steady for spots and higher at the opening for futures, although the latter subsequently gave way and closed at a net falling off of 1-16@3-16c. Factors were consequently firm in adhering to their previous pretensions, while operations were restricted by brokers being unable to find in the limited supply offering the kinds wanted, and the sales were confined to 425 bales, at stiffer rates for the higher grades, without any quotable advance. On Tuesday the movement was partially suspended by brokers being unable to find the kinds wanted unless at prices above both the ruling rates and the limits of their orders, and the business was consequently confined to a little over 225 bales. Middling sold at 15¾c., but was generally held higher.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,650 bales, against 3,250 for the corresponding time last week and 5,430 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 980,637 bales, against 1,204,426 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 265,627 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 294,950—3,458,027 against 3,742,977. The exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 42,219 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 37,288 to France, and of 181,919 to other foreign ports. Religious Notices.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday, the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $10, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Orillin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner-load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees; William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran, J. H. Keller, B. O. L. Rayne, G. W. W. Goodwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

PARIS, June 25.—The loss of life by the flood at Toulouse is appalling. In the St. Cypriel quarter two hundred and fifteen corpses have already been found. The violence of the torrent frustrated the efforts to rescue the unfortunate inmates of the houses. Several men were drowned in the attempt. Twenty thousand persons are deprived of the means of subsistence in Toulouse alone. Tho disasters elsewhere are of almost equal magnitude.

The lower part ef the city of Lolslac, on the Tarn, is hidden under water. At Trelaullet, in the department of Arriege, five houses only remain standing out of four hundred. To the Public.

The board of directors of the New Orleans and Pacific Railway Company wish to briefly explain their intentions in regard to the early and efficient construction of a railroad from Alexandria, on Red river, via Natchitoches and Mansfield to Texas, preliminary and in aid of the greater plan of an all-rail connection with this city.

They propose to obtain from the property owners, incorporated institutions, professional gentlemen, merchants, traders and persons of every calling, as generous subscriptions for stock as possible, and will immediately call upon them for that purpose, making the periods for payment run over as long a time as can be done.

Until $150,000 have been subscribed, however, no contract for construction of the road can be made; but this sum obtained, the first section—the line namely, that between Alexandria and Natchitoches—of about sixty miles, will be immediately put under contract, and it is confidently believed the same will be ready for transportation of passengers and freight by the first of January next, and the entire road to the objective point in Texas by the following September, 1876.

Can our fellow-citizens doubt our success, or hesitate to assist liberally in the execution of so great an enterprise—one indissolubly linked with the future prosperity of New Orleans?

President N. O. and P. Railway Co.
NEW ORLEANS, June 28, 1875.

A MALAGASY SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The first regular Sunday school in Madagascar has been gathered at Antananarivo. An interesting sketch of it appears in the London Sunday School Chronicle: An English printer, connected with the Friends' mission, is its superintendent. A native superintendent seemed out of the question, for "the Malsgasy, even those who know a good deal, have not the smallest idea how to rule or keep order. An English child of ten could keep order in a large school of boys as well as any of these people." On the first Sunday six hundred and thirty boys and girls crowded into "the boys' school Ambohijatova," a building about thirty feet square. It was not an easy matter to enroll the new scholars, for, according to the report of one of the teachers, "their names are very queer, and the girls will cover up their mouths with their lambas when they are asked a question, so that it is almost impossible to make out what they say, and if I asked them to repeat it they would all laugh. These people have no surnames, so we get plenty of the same name, and have to number them—especially such names as Raketaka, for that only means 'youngest child;' Raketabas, which means 'the newborn youngest child;' Ramatoa, 'the eldest child;' Razafy—i. e., 'a grandchild;' Razallmanga—i. e., 'Miss Blue grandchild.' It seems funny to hear of Miss Blue or Miss Red, though I don't know why it should be worse than Miss White or Miss Black. Some names are much longer, such as Rasoamanadino, Ramanauzanahary."

THERE was a good deal that was farcical and much that was profane, says the Christian Intelligencer, in the way in which the eighty-fourth birthday of the Pope was celebrated at Rome, recently, by adherents of the papacy. As if he were the only man in the world enjoying good health at the advanced age of eighty-four, some of the faithful declared that the Pope was "a standing miracle." A large number of presents were showered upon him, some of which were elegant and some intrinsically ludicrous; among them being a richly-wrought chalice of silver, a valuable diamond ring, a bracelet, a necklace (the three last named would have been more appropriate if there were a Mrs. Mastai Ferretti,) and a number of "precious and eloquent pieces of money." Some "pilgrims" from Germany, in the absence of this sort of eloquence, presented an address in which they made up in fulsomeness what they lacked in coin, and said, "Submission to the Roman pontiff is absolutely essential to the salvation of every creature," evidently forgetting the words of the psalmist, "Vain is the salvation of man," or these other words of Peter when he said of the Savior: "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

SHE said: "Papa, won't you buy me a new dress?" "What, buy you a new dress, Suay?" "Yes, papa, won't you?" "Well, I'll see. I'll speak to your mother about it." Elongation to an alarming extent rapidly spread over that little countenance, but a thought suddenly struck her, and with a smile she looked up into her father's face and said: "Well, papa, if you do speak to mamma about it, touch her easy, or she may want the new dress herself!"

A FEW days since a dun called on a young gentleman and presented him a bill, when he was somewhat taken aback by the gentleman taking him aside and blandly saying: "My dear sir, call next Thursday and I'll tell you when to call again."

From the Work.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL ORGANIZED.—Mr. Editor: All the friends of God and the church, and especially the ministers of the gospel who have labored among the people here, will rejoice to know what a prosperous and flourishing Sabbath school we have at the Mount Pleasant Methodist Episcopal Church, on Bluff Creek. On the first Sabbath in this month almost the entire community—parents and children—assembled at the church for the purpose of organizing a permanent Sunday school. Officers were elected to conduct and supervise the school. Teachers were selected and appointed. The Rev. C. J. Phillips made a few appropriate and suggestive remarks, illustrating the advantages and good of a well-conducted Sunday school to a community, which were highly appreciated. The school was then called to order, the scholars arranged into classes, and teachers assigned and officers elected. Rev. Irvin Roberts was unanimously elected superintendent.

The school now numbers over one hundred regular scholars. Bro. C. J. Phillips, our circuit preacher, visits the school once a month, and takes delight in giving words of praise and encouragement to all. In a short time this Sunday school will compete in character with any school in the State. Bro. Irvin Roberts deserves great credit for the untiring zeal and assiduity with which he labors for the interest and promotion of the school. Last Sabbath all the officers were present. Eight teachers answered to their names. One hundred and twelve scholars were present and twelve applied for admission. Yours truly,

SITROP.

BLUFF CREEK, Jackson Co., Miss., June 24, 1875.

LOUISVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The revival spirit spoken of in our last letter still remains with us. Every Sabbath witnesses some new demonstration of God's power to save, and no Sabbath sun sinks in the west but with tender regrets from many hearts that another day of rest—burdened with gracious privileges, hallowed with prayer and praise, mellowed with riper Christian experience, and pregnant with a foretaste sweet of heavenly bliss—has gone. Last Sunday we received into fellowship eight, making in all since our last report fourteen. We number probably more conversions than accessions. Thus the work of the blessed Master goes quietly but earnestly and persistently on in this out-of-the-way part of the vineyard.

Our hopes are bright as to the future, for we have some luscious clusters of grapes from Ashcol as yet untouched—protracted meetings, camp meetings, etc. By that time we expect to hear a universal outbursting shout of "Let us go up at once and possess the land, for we are well able."

Your brother in Christ,

A. E. CLAY, P. C.

JUNE 23, 1875.

ST. PAUL'S, MOBILE.—Mr. Editor: We are in the enjoyment of a delightful season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord at St. Paul's. Nine ten new members have been added to the church within the last few days, and we have six candidates for church membership. We think that at least thirty-five dead souls have been made alive during the revival. We are much indebted to Revs. Joshua T. Heard and Alexander Hood for laborious and efficient service during our meeting.

I have written the above solely for the encouragement of any of my brethren in the ministry who may be doubtful of the propriety of beginning a protracted meeting during the "heated term." It takes only two to make a revival of religion—God, who is always willing, and the soul whom Jesus died to save.

JOSIAH BARKER.

MOBILE, June 21, 1875.

GEORGETOWN CIRCUIT, BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: We wish to report to the friends of missions that we have succeeded in raising subscriptions to the amount of $225 on the Georgetown circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference. No man has paid more than $10. Almost the entire membership have done something. The prospect for crops was never more flattering. The largest crop of oats has been harvested that perhaps ever was gathered in this country. The spiritual condition of the circuit is pretty good. Protracted meetings will begin soon. Yours truly,

BASCOM T. PEARSON, P. C.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., June 26, 1875.

Letter from Texas.

MR. EDITOR: As I have had the pleasure of a visit to our institutions of learning, it is about these you shall hear.

In company with Revs. I. G. John and R. T. Nabors, of Galveston, I left this place last Saturday to attend the commencement exercises of Chappell Hill Female College, and Soule University, at Chappell Hill. The commencement sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Pugh, of Calvert, Texas. Notwithstanding the rain, we had a fine congregation, and they were well paid for coming in the sermon. Bro. Pitts, the president of the female college, had arranged to have a children's meeting at three P. M., and again the people had the rain to contend with; but still we had a fine audience of children to listen to the addresses, delivered by Rev. I. G. John and Judge Thomas. These men are known through our State as great Sunday school workers, and they are able to meet the expectations of the people. As the Rev. W. H. Milburn failed to be present, and we had been disappointed the night before in hearing a sermon from Rev. H. V. Philpott, on Christian education, on Monday, after the young ladies had read their compositions, we then were permitted to listen to Bro. Philpott upon the above subject. No better subject could have been selected upon the occasion, and he proved himself equal to the task. We hope to see that sermon in print, and then hope every Methodist in the South who has children to educate will get a copy and read it. It is calculated to do much good in every circle.

In the evening the juvenile exhibition of Soule University took place. This institution is in charge of Capt. McNeely, from Alabama, and from what we saw he has been very successful since he came to this place. The boys are not lost sight of for the young men. He has recently had the buildings repaired, and everything is now in a condition to offer advantages to young men inferior to none in Texas.

On Tuesday we witnessed the prize declamation by the young men of Soule University, and we have listened to many upon such occasions, but have heard none that excelled these. The prize was awarded to Mr. J. W. Mercer, of Washington county. After this the literary address was delivered by Rev. R. T. Nabors, of Galveston, selecting for his subject "Character;" and, doing justice to his theme, you may know we were well entertained. The day closed with a musical entertainment given by Sister Pitts and her music class, twenty-nine in number; and, judging from the order in the audience, we have never attended one that gave as much satisfaction as this.

On Wednesday the young ladies of the graduating class read their compositions. The baccalaureate address was delivered by Hon. J. D. Thomas; and his theme being appropriate for the occasion, the ability of the man for such a task gave the audience great expectations, which were fully realized in the address; after which the diplomas were delivered by Capt. McNeely with a very appropriate address. The board of trustees of Soule University, at their regular meeting, conferred the honorary degree of doctor of divinity on Rev. I. G. John, of Galveston, and Rev. H. V. Philpott, of Austin.

We have reason to rejoice over the success of our church institutions. The trustees of these institutions have come up through many difficulties; but, thanks be to the great Head of the church, we are getting out of darkness and enjoying the light of day. Your brother,

I. Z. T. MORRIS.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, June 11, 1875.

THE Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., graduated thirteen candidates for the ministry last week. The professors are Drs. Bannister, Hemmenway, Raymond and Nlude. A large number of able theological and philosophical papers were read before the Ministerial Union during the week—a grand supplement to the theological course.

"WISDOM, wisdom, ready understanding, science, learning out of a thousand books!" Such is the cry of the world. An evil sound is in the churches and the schools. One thing is needful—one book, one Christ.—Hedinger.

The Greenville College.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of the Alabama Conference, held in Opelika, the Collegiate Institute of Greenville, Ala., was recognized as one of our institutions of learning. It closed its session last Friday. It has on its catalogue the names of one hundred and sixty-seven students. It has a faculty consisting of a president and eight teachers. It is located in the county seat of Butler, in a town which shows evidences of thrift and energy and refinement, and has a population of five thousand.

To this flourishing institution I made a visit last week, and on the thirteenth instant preached the commencement sermon. The Methodist church in Greenville is a spacious and very beautiful edifice, and is really an ornament to the town.

On Monday night Col. Herbert, of Montgomery, delivered the annual oration before the literary society of the college. It was full of excellent counsels, and very highly valued by the crowded audience. Rev. Dr. A. S. Andrews, of Montgomery, delivered an oration on Thursday night, of which the South Alabamian speaks in terms full of praise and admiration. I left Greenville on Tuesday and returned to my home in Mobile, and on this account I can make no report of the exercises of the college after Monday night.

Maj. Dunklin is the president, and he deserves much praise for the energy and skill which he exhibits in the management of the college. The valuable service rendered by him is gratuitous. Greenville is his home, and he is striving to make it a town in which all the facilities for religious and literary culture may be found; and the signs of success are encouraging. Rev. H. Urquhart and Rev. T. W. Dyer are professors. They are alumni of the Southern University, and practical and skillful teachers. The other members of the faculty are educated ladies, whose capacity is unquestioned.

The presiding elder of the district in which Greenville is situated, Rev. S. C. Richardson, is worthy of much commendation because of his zeal in the cause of education and religion. At the last Conference he reported sixteen schools in operation in his district, under the patronage of the church of which he is an honored minister; and he now reports that he has forty teachers at work.

In that region of Alabama the Methodist Church is doing much to educate and elevate and save the people. The fruit will be seen and enjoyed by future generations.

If we could introduce our church papers into all the families that wait on our ministrations, and have them read carefully, and then influence the members of the church to talk about our work, so that all the people might know what we are doing, the rank of the Methodist Church would be recognized as of great elevation. In this State of Alabama we are doing a great work, and God is granting us his blessings.

E. WADSWORTH.

MOBILE, June 22, 1875.

MEETING OF GRAND COUNCIL.—Mr. Editor: The meeting of the Grand Council of United Friends of Temperance of North Louisiana will be held at Farmerville, Union parish, La., on the third Wednesday (twenty-first) of July, 1875. All officers and members of sister councils are respectfully invited to attend.

Grand Scribe U. F. of T.,

ARIZONA, La., June 18, 1875.

ABANDONMENT OF ICELAND.—The abandonment of Iceland is more probable than ever since the tremendous volcanic eruption which during the winter and spring has been spreading ruin over a large part of the east firths of the island. It was preceded by great earthquakes, and then mountain peaks began vomiting fire and showering ashes and scoriæ, until in March the whole region of the Myreth mountains was one blazing fire. On March 29 the ashes fell in such enormous quantities that the sunny day was transformed to one of absolute darkness—"that might be felt," most assuredly, for when the wind shifted the ashes lay six inches deep all over the country side. The fountains and streams were dammed with them, and every mountain stream ran dark and thick between banks covered with drifts of ashes. All the pasturage, which is the reliance of the Icelandic farmers, is of course destroyed, and the farmers have fled with their cattle in search of other pasture.

Children of the Church.

We take the following from the reported proceedings of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, which recently met at St. Louis:

SESSIONAL RECORDS.

An overture from Bethel presbytery, asking, first, that the column for baptized non-communicants be removed from the form for statistical reports; and, second, asking that a column be added to it for the losses by death or removal. Both requests were answered in the negative.

CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH.

An overture from East Hanover presbytery contained three questions:

"1. Are all baptized non-communicants, resident within the bounds of a congregation, to be enrolled without respect to any limit of age or to moral character and deportment?

"2. Are those to be enrolled, one of whose parents, at least, is a member of the Presbyterian Church, but who have been baptized by ministers and in churches of other evangelical denominations?

"3. What shall be the rule of enrollment where one parent is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the other of some other evangelical church?"

To the first question the answer recommended is that all baptized children under parental training, and all who bring certificates from other churches, shall be reported. To the second and third questions the answer was yes, provided they are under the training of our church.

Rev. H. A. Brown, of Charlotte county, Va., asked at what age the baptized non-communicating church member is to be dropped. At twenty-one? The (first) question of East Hanover presbytery is not answered, because the committee does not tell us the age when the baptized child ceases to be a church member. The usage of sessions may differ. The answer of the committee seems to me to leave the question in the same position.

Dr. Girardeau said that the committee saw the infinite difficulties in settling the question as to the age in thesi. There is little difficulty in settling the question practically. Those who are under parental training shall be counted, no matter what may be their character.

Rev. Dr. Stuart Robinson was struck with the wisdom of the committee's answer. This action of the last Assembly reduces the theory of our church in reference to baptized children to practice. The theoretical principle is attended with infinite difficulties. But the practical questions are surrounded with none.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Shearer would like the phrase added to the answer: "Such baptized adults as are willing." This would largely increase church rolls.

Dr. Robinson called attention to the technical meaning of the phrase, "Children of the church," which, without reference to age, includes all the seed of the covenant: "I am one of the children of the church, and I consider it a great privilege."

A member of the committee remarked that the committee spent two hours in considering this question and framing this answer.

Mr. —— thought the children of the church were entitled to be considered minors until they were born again and received their spiritual birthright.

The report was adopted by a hearty vote.

REMARKING on the close of the Moody services at the London Opera House, the Freeman says: "When the history of the work in Britain comes to be reviewed, we question if it will contain a more striking chapter than that which tells of the strong hold the evangelists took of the fashionable quarter of London—the very last place where one would have expected them to make an impression. There can be no doubt that they have been instrumental in doing a great amount of good at the West End. This week the Archbishop of Canterbury has allowed a letter to be printed in which he speaks thankfully of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, though he takes care to qualify his praise, after the usual Episcopal fashion of diluting every expression of opinion. Less reserved was the utterance of Lord Shaftesbury, who, at a meeting of one of the great Episcopal societies, thanked God that Mr. Moody had not been educated at Oxford, and declared his belief that the Chicago preacher had effected more good by a few addresses in a tent than was ever accomplished by all Canon Liddon's 'grand sermons' in Whitehall and in St. Paul's. The outspoken earl, on the same occasion, cited some words of a similar import spoken to him by the Lord Chancellor. On Wednesday there was a striking scene at the Opera House, when Mr. Moody addressed nearly two thousand blind people of all ages. Many members of the aristocracy were present, and the simple discourses of the preacher brought tears to many eyes."

THE Boston School of Theology reports that during the year two courses of special lectures have been given, the one by Dr. W. B. Anderson, on "Scientific Method," the other by Bishop Foster. The Spanish language has been taught, with particular reference to missionary labor in Mexico and other Spanish-speaking peoples. One lady, Miss Anna Oliver, has been admitted to the regular course.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

I.

The scene was more beautiful far to the eye
Than if day in its pride had arrayed it;
The land-breeze blew mild, and the azure-arched sky
Looked pure as the Spirit that made it.

II.

The murmur rose soft as I silently gazed
On the shadowy wave's playful motion;
From the dim, distant hill the lighthouse fire blazed
Like a star on the midst of the ocean.

III.

No longer the joy of the sailor-boy's breast
Was heard in his wildly-breathed numbers;
The sea-bird had flown to her wave-girdled nest,
The fisherman sunk to his slumbers.

IV.

One moment I looked from the hill's gentle slope;
All hushed was the billow's commotion;
And I thought that the lighthouse looked lovely as Hope,
That star on Life's tremulous ocean.

V.

The time is long past and the scene is afar,
Yet when my head rests on its pillow
Will memory sometimes rekindle the star
That blazed on the breast of the billow.

VI.

In life's closing hour—when the trembling soul flies,
And death stills the heart's last emotion—
O then may the seraph of mercy arise
Like a star on Eternity's ocean!

"Do Good Unto All Men, ESPECIALLY UNTO THOSE OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH."

This is a Scripture precept. As such its authority is as plenary as that of any other command. It is just as binding upon us as the command: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." It demands as implicit obedience as: "Honor thy father and thy mother." Yet in an experience of twenty years I have never heard a minister of any denomination preach on this duty, nor have I known a layman who in any strict sense practiced it.

Before proceeding further let us inquire: What does the precept mean?

No better definition can be given than that contained in our excellent Book of Discipline. It means: "Employing them preferably to others, buying one of another, helping each other in business; and so much the more because the world will love its own, and them only."

Now I would ask: Who of our preachers advocates this from the pulpit, and in his intercourse with the people? And who of our laymen practice it?

Are not our churches often built and painted and plastered by the carpenter, the painter and the plasterer who have no respect for the God worshiped in them, and who never pay one cent toward the support of the gospel? Is not the same true of our private residences? Are not our families treated by physicians who fear not God, who often regard not the rights of man, who never contribute of their means to the advancement of Christ's kingdom, but rather stand as obstacles in the way? May not the same also be said of the men from whom we purchase our groceries and dry goods? On the other hand, have we not brethren in all of these avocations in life who are just as competent as those? Then why not give them the full benefit of our patronage and influence?

What would be the consequences? Many women who are now struggling hard to keep their children decent by turning old clothes wrong-side out and making new ones out of them, and many men who are almost in despair, not knowing where to obtain bread for their wives and children, would not only have enough for home consumption, but would be able to contribute their share toward the furtherance of all the enterprises of the church.

Suppose the contract for building that church had been given to that Christian mechanic—would he not cheerfully have contributed $50 to the missionary cause? But it was given to a man who neither knows nor cares if there be a missionary cause.

If that wealthy steward had given his job of painting to his poor brother, would he not gladly have paid his assessment? But he gave it to a man whose name never has been on an assessment roll, and in all probability never will be.

If that good man who professes to "love the brethren" had paid that five-hundred-dollar check to a Christian physician for professional services rendered, would he not joyfully have subscribed $25 or $50 of it to the support of the widows and orphans? But he paid it to a man who would not turn on his heel for a widow or an orphan without his fee being well secured beforehand.

So on I might go to the end of the list; for these are not fancy sketches. These facts can be gathered any day by any one who will take the trouble to inquire. Let me illustrate the good results which would flow to the church if the membership thereof could be prevailed upon to practice the precept under consideration. Look at that great and good though much-abused people, the Jews. Who ever saw a Jewish pauper? And why not? Because they regard a pauper as a reproach to Israel, and because one of the cardinal doctrines of their religion is to help one another in business. We as Christians can accomplish the same desirable end if we will use the same means. The Jews have not only banished paupers from their midst, but as individuals their average wealth exceeds that of any other people on the globe. This explains why they support their ministry and all their church enterprises without ever being seen on the streets soliciting contributions, and selling tickets to those peculiarly Christian (?) institutions—fairs, concerts and spelling matches. This, then, solves the problem of church finance. They support their benevolent enterprises liberally, because they are all able to contribute. We have a hard struggle to keep the machinery of our churches moving, because a large proportion of our membership is too poor to pay anything.

Let us see how the Savior magnifies this duty of doing good, especially to those of the "household of faith." He says that in the great day of judgment the Judge will say: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," etc. Why? Because "when I was hungry ye gave me meat, when I was naked ye clothed me," etc. When? "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." This decision of our Savior entirely overturns our common notions of our duty to our fellow-Christians. We are in the habit of thinking that if we love our brethren and pray for them, and give them good advice, we have discharged our whole duty. But the Savior does not even mention these things, but decides our destiny for eternity by the bread which we have given them to eat, and the clothes we have given them to wear. We think that if we provide food for their souls their bodies may be left to take care of themselves. We vainly imagine that we can weave for ourselves wedding garments of the gossamer of our prayers and songs and pious counsels, but he teaches us that they must be constructed from the coarser but more substantial fiber of the bread and clothing which we have provided for those of the "household of faith."

This may seem strange at first view, but it will not after more mature reflection. The greater always includes the lesser. It requires more religion to help a brother in business than it does to pray for him. The Savior saw that the same spirit which leads us to help a man provide for his wife and children will necessarily prompt us to pray for him. Let us therefore fear lest, when we imagine ourselves clothed in purple and fine linen, and ready for the marriage, the Bridegroom should say unto us: "Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having on a wedding garment?" Then shall we say: "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" But he will say: "Depart from me, for I never knew you;" for "I was hungry and ye gave me no meat, naked and ye clothed me not." "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me."

Let us, then, as Christians, laying aside all denominational differences, come together and organize a grand Christian brotherhood. Let us get up a Christian business directory. Let it contain only the names and occupations of those who are in good standing in our churches; and let us pledge ourselves to patronize one another in business at all times. Thus will we "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." And the time will not be far distant when our churches will all be out of debt and our pastors well supported. This plan is a perfect success with the Jews, and it will succeed just as well with us. The church will then march forward as an army with banners, crushing every obstacle and routing every enemy. The world, looking on in amazement, will be forced to exclaim, as it did of old: "See how these Christians love one another!"

Fun and Amusement.

MR. EDITOR: Down our way things are so dry that something is required to stir a breeze. The roads and fields are dry, the creek branches even look thirsty, and even the church is hankering for moisture. The former demand rain, the latter requires oil, to work the joints. The King who is head over the church has a large reservoir full of the needful oil, but somehow the conducting pipes are out of connection, and the machine is about to stop for lack of oil. He has said: First seek me, and then these side wants will be satisfied; but somehow our church in "Little Business" reverses the order of proceeding, and is set upon looking after the side things first, in hope by and by to reach the most important item. So there being a great drouth of spiritual riches, the Sanhedrim was called to meet in order to devise ways to meet the crisis, and secure a supply of the needful. The consultation developed the fact that in the church there was no financial moisture. The war, the worm, bad government and various other enemies had pumped it dry as the desert, and the only road to recuperate the empty treasury was a resort to a flank movement to secure victory and fill the chest. So, like adroit and skillful generals, they masked their real intentions from the enemy, and put forth a banner inscribed "Fun and Amusement," and the result justified the mode of attack; for Big creek overflowed its banks, and Dry creek looked anything but dry. Alluvial town and Sand-hill town rang with the shouts of rejoicing. Hill responded to hill, and the plains were made glad, for the church had laid aside her white robes, and put on colored calico in token of good will to the King's enemies.

But in the midst of this jubilee I saw Modesty, Godliness and Sobriety avoiding every form of evil, Humility following Jesus, Prayerfulness keeping unspotted, Non-conformity to the world, and ever so many faithful servants of the King take refuge beneath the shadow of a great rock; for they are lovers of peace, and shun temptation.

But the people of "Little Business" cared not for this. It was the clearest evidence that these absentees were over-righteous and pretty full of bigotry. Could not a puro-minded church member dance till day, and then bow the knee to God with as much reverence and spiritual comfort as one of these preacher-ridden people? Was not the church the rightful inheritor of all things, and was she not by this right of inheritance entitled to every innocent amusement and all joyous fun? Thus it is "Little Business," being intent mainly on self-gratification, uses the church as the string upon which to make its music, and as the bridge over which it marches to victory.

To enter into all the details of the battle, to point out the maneuvers employed to insure success to mammon, would require the hand of an artist. He would need a profound knowledge of music, both serious and comic; then of the adaptation of comedy to the promotion of spiritual life; then of the special and specific action of pnuch in promoting holiness of heart; and lastly, the quickening power which inheres in dancing to raise our affections heavenward, and increase our growth in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Too much learning for one poor piny woods dweller! I tell you, Mr. Editor, that were some of your learned brethren to pay me a visit (I am close to the north fork of Bear creek) and look on at the resthetic doings in "Meager mission," they would gather up valuable items; among which would be how to run the church on anti-scriptural principles; how to convert the corrupting influences of the world into a pure oil with which to lubricate the soul-machinery of every member; how to build up the membership in pure and undefiled religion without watching and praying, without cross-bearing, without giving up one iota of this world, and yet follow the meek and lowly Jesus. Does your philosophy reach so high?

Being an "Innocent," may I ask you whether, in our Father's kingdom above, "cotillion and round dances, jigs and balance to your partners," are indulged in? Are earthly Ganymedes translated to heaven to ladle out punch, and are the followers of this evil world's ways named as among the white-robed throng who stand before the throne?

Is it any wonder that judgment, spiritual dearth, dishonesty and evil living are the current objects in the field of vision, and the valley full of dry bones, and, though hell is but a breath removed, the sleepers are not awakened? Is the kingdom of Christ to be made supreme in every land and over every people by the use of such means, and are they in truth his disciples who lower their standard to the plane of the world?

God to-day is moving in glorious majesty in portions of the world, and the power of his Spirit is causing formalism to appear in its true nature, and his spiritual children to rejoice; and we, so highly favored, are winking at all these foreign elements creeping into the church, and are afraid of putting them aside lest we offend some. "The earth also is defiled, and the inhabitants thereof," because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance and broken the everlasting covenant. "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate."

JOHN SMITH, JR.

YOU had better be poisoned in your blood than in your principle.

Freedom, Law, Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: I do not write for the purpose of preserving Bro. Richardson's patience, although he seems to be fast getting in the condition of the little folks who are pleading so piteously that Grandpa Goodale would tell them "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Nor do I write because I am "a Calvinist," but because I think the good brother is about as much "at sea" and "out in the wilderness" as the dear children are about what Grandpa Goodale is going to tell them. A great deal that he says is true, and would contain no error if it were said in some other connection. But standing as it does, it wonderfully bewilders, and may mislead; while some things he says, we respectfully submit, are not true at all. When the brother says that "Adam was placed under the eternal (?) law of good and evil, and had the capacity of knowing or doing good or evil," and that "holiness was certainly the divine purpose when he gave to Adam his image and likeness"—this sounds well enough if it were not for the intended reference to that restated proposition that "God cannot, in the nature and relation of things, create moral holiness or sin." And even this proposition would itself be true if it were not intended to teach what it does not say, but what the brother does say elsewhere—i. e., "If God could make a man holy he could certainly keep him from sin." The question is not whether God can "create moral holiness," but whether God can and did "create a holy man." Holiness is a state or condition of a moral being. It is not essential to the existence of a moral being, but it is the right condition of every moral being, because every moral being should be like God, and "God is holy." Now if God made Adam in another condition or state than that which "the eternal fitness of things" calls for, this was certainly his "strange work."

"The Preacher" (see Ecclesiastes vii, 29) says: "So, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." But Bro. Richardson says he has found "that God did not make man upright" or holy. The question is not whether God made Adam perform holy acts, or made him perform sinful acts, after he had created him; but in what condition was he when created? He was under no obligations to acquire anything which he did not possess, but only to use what was given him. If God "could not make Adam holy," Adam could not make himself holy; and if he was not holy in himself he could do no holy thing, for holy actions can only proceed from holy beings.

St. Paul says we are to be created anew in righteousness "and true holiness." Now why call this new creature, or creation, holy, if the old creation was not "holy?" But Bro. Richardson asks with an air of triumph: "If God can create holiness, why are not all men holy?" I answer: God cannot create holiness as an entity or essence, neither can man. But God can create or recreate man holy, or a holy man; and when so created, and only then, man can, like God, "be holy," and perform holy actions.

Adam "was made a sinner before he sinned," satan tempting him, and he assenting thereto. No man can sin until he is sinful. The moral condition of the soul is established before its expression in the act. So man must be holy before the expression or putting forth of a holy life is possible.

After reading all that Bro. Richardson has said, I am still in the condition of "the Preacher" above referred to: "Only this have I found, that God made man upright."

Respectfully,

F. T. MITCHELL.

Obituaries.

MOTHER MARGARET REBECCA GRIFFING died, at her residence in Claiborne county, Miss., on the sixteenth of April, 1875. She was born March 19, 1803. She was first married to a Mr. Hawley. After his death she was again married, on the fifteenth of November, 1837, to our well-known and much-loved brother, James Griffing, who passed over to his reward July 11, 1858, since which Mother Griffing and an only brother have lived on the old homestead, both full of faith, until death came and claimed her as his victim. The only brother, two years her senior, still lingers, waiting for the Lord to "wipe away his servant's tears and take his exile home." Mother Griffing joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1835 or 1836, and was converted about the same time, which conversion was ever bright and clear, and was fully demonstrated to all who knew her by all her after-life. She was indeed a "light in the world and the salt of the earth." Mother Griffing, after her marriage to Bro. Griffing, became the stepmother of a large family, that seemed to love her as a mother. She told her pastor that she loved them as her own—that she knew no difference.

Her health had been declining for some months before her death. Although she was aware of it, she was not alarmed, but was cheerful and happy. As she was impressed that she would be removed soon, she would get very happy in view of the immortal crown awaiting her beyond the skies. As it was evident that her declining health would prevent her from attending church, her pastor and neighbors agreed to meet at her house for service, instead of at the church in the vicinity. When told of the appointment she seemed very much rejoiced, but expressed a good deal of doubt as to being present, saying that it made no difference, as she was living by the hour—was ready to go, even anxious to go, at any time the Lord called. Some two weeks before the time for the appointment came a slow fever took hold upon her; and several times she was reminded of the appointment in order to cheer her, as she would always brighten when the gospel of Jesus was mentioned. On these occasions she remarked that they would be disappointed, as they would have a funeral instead of a sermon on that evening. And so it was. At precisely the hour for preaching the sad friends and neighbors were assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to her, while the spirit had gone to join the disembodied saints in heaven. If one had been there who was not acquainted with that assembly he would have thought that there were many near relatives there. But not so; for there was but one brother, there or elsewhere, in this vale of tears. All had passed over before her. We will not attempt a description of the greetings of the three children and the many other dear ones as they hailed her in "triumph ascending the skies." She lived so near the cross daily that "Her lips and life expressed

The holy gospel she professed."

She often said that she was confident that, as her blessed Lord had given her so many victories over the world, the flesh and the devil, he would give her the victory over death.

The weary itinerant, who always met a hearty welcome from her, will miss her now; and the minister who labors there will look in vain for that face glowing with appreciation and desire for the success of the word, and will feel that there is one less there to pray for him and for his success. All who knew her loved her. But while we sorrow, we "sorrow not even as others which have no hope."

May God give grace to the lonely and bereaved brother, and to the friends and relatives of the departed loved one, that all may meet her where parting is no more.

HER PASTOR.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Franklin Street Sunday school, Mobile, Ala., upon the death of Mrs. DELLA SIMS, wife of Thomas W. Sims:

There is a vacant seat in our midst, which reminds us that another Christian worker hath gone from our number. Another string of the lyre, which sounded in the great anthem of praise three Sabbaths ago, now sounds on earth no more. Another heart, which so recently beat in sympathy with the poor and the suffering, is now still in the quiet grave. A family, united to us by the ties of friendship and brotherhood, has been deprived of the light and joy of all that rich cluster of blessings combined in the Christian wife and mother.

Sister Della Sims is dead! The Master called for her on Friday morning, the eleventh of June, at one o'clock. He found her, like the wise virgins, with her lamp trimmed and burning, ready to enter with the Bridegroom into the marriage feast above.

"Life's duty done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say:
'How blest the righteous when he dies.'"

While we take comfort from the firm belief that it is well with her, we are, nevertheless, made sad by the fact that her family is deeply bereaved, that the Sunday school has lost a faithful teacher, that the church militant has been dispossessed of a true soldier, and that the community at large has been deprived of a valuable member.

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God, in his wisdom, to afflict us thus in the death of our sister; therefore,

Resolved, That it is meet and right that we, the Sunday school of which she was a member, give this public testimonial of our appreciation of her worth, and that we mourn for her as a fellow-teacher, and as a sister faithful and beloved.

Resolved, That we bow in submission to the holy will of him who "doeth all things well," that we sorrow not as those who have no hope, and that we give thanks to God that she was able to leave us the testimonial that she died the death of the righteous.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Bro. Sims as a token of our sympathy and brotherly regard, and that a copy be also sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

JOHN MASSEY,
WILLIAM OTIS,

MOBILE, ALA., June 20, 1875.

MRS. NANNIE ADAIR, the wife of my brother, James M. Adair, lost her life during a terrible storm which passed near Columbia, La., March 19, 1875. At the same time her little son, John David, an affectionate and a peculiarly thoughtful child six years old, came to his death in the same manner. My sister was a daughter of Uncle David Masters, a man of precious memory, and a long-time member of the Methodist Church South. She was born December 27, 1841, and was thirty-four years old at her death. She professed religion and joined the church at Centerville in 1857, during the ministry of Bro. Robert Parvin, of this Conference. In her religious life she was steady, devout and uniform, ever adhering closely to the rules and regulations of the church she loved the best of all others. In her the church has lost a member indeed—one whose house was always the cheerful home of piety, and the pleasant resort of her brethren, sisters and ministers. Though not so demonstrative as many pious people, yet none more ardently enjoyed their religious privileges than she.

But, alas! the sweetest of enjoyments end, and the brightest links of affection are rudely broken by the Destroyer. The silvery stream of life is often suddenly lost in the yawning abyss of death. But an hour after she was in the glow of life she was a crushed, yes, almost a mangled form, struggling in the unrelaxing grip of death. She lived only seven hours and a half, but was rational to the last, displaying a calmness and a serenity sufficient to drive all dismay and alarm to the winds. In the midst of the most excruciating agonies she read her title clear to mansions in the skies, and exhorted her friends and children to follow her as she had Christ. Her earthly mission is ended, but her memory and her influence are among us yet, and they will remain until we join her above. Farewell, dear sister! We will not deplore thee, for thou art gone to the better land beyond the chilling river, where skies are always bright, and storms come no more forever. That God may give us all grace to follow on, and that we may meet again in the midst of everlasting joy, is the prayer of an affectionate BROTHER.

GREENWOOD, La.

MRS. MARY ANN DAY, consort of M. P. Day, was born in Queen Anne county, Md., September 10, 1827; was married to Minous P. Day, in Cherokee, Logan county, O., February 3, 1847, and departed this life on the fifteenth day of March, 1875.

The subject of the above sketch was stung by a wasp on the wrist, the pain running up the arm. A short time afterward a pain struck her in the heart and in five or ten minutes she was lifeless. She asked: "Can no one help me?" But, alas! all that could be done by man could not restore her to consciousness. She sleeps in the silent tomb at Columbia, La.

Hers was a checkered life, with fightings without and fears within. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South and professed conversion in 1856, and was a member when she died. She was a sympathetic friend, a devoted wife and an affectionate mother. Was a neighbor sick? It was her delight to administer to his wants. It was her hand that smoothed the pillow, and with words of kindness and deeds of love cheered and comforted the afflicted one. She desired to accomplish all the good she could. Few, except those who were intimately acquainted with her, knew of her great desire to be more religious, and of the profound respect in which she held the profession of religion. If she thought one was acting contrary to the principles of the blessed religion of Jesus she was ready to warn, and give a sweet, gentle reproof. Often has the writer admired her profound respect for religion and its comforts.

How true that "In the midst of life we are in death!" It is hard for one wasted by disease to meet death. But, oh! when he comes to the strong frame, in comparative health, and snatches the beloved without a moment's warning, how hard and fearful for the living to realize it!

I WILL govern my life and my thoughts as if the whole world were to see the one and to read the other; for what does it signify to make anything a secret to my neighbor, when to God, who is the searcher of our hearts, all our privacies are open?—Seneca.

SATURDAY EVENING.

How sweet the evening shadows fall,
Advancing from the west,
And ends the weary week of toil,
And comes the day of rest!

Bright o'er the earth the star of eve
Her radiant beauty sheds,
And myriad sisters calmly weave
Their light around our heads.

Rest, man, from labor! rest from sin!
The world's hard contest close;
The holy hours with God begin—
Yield thee to sweet repose.

Bright o'er the earth the morning ray
Its sacred light will cast,
Fair emblem of the glorious day
That evermore shall last.

Sleep, and How to Procure It.

I have no hesitation in saying that the proper thing to do is to go to sleep immediately, or at least very soon, after the meal of the day. All animals always go to sleep, if they are not disturbed, after eating. This is especially noticeable in dogs; and the great John Hunter showed by an experiment that digestion went on during sleep more than when the animal was awake and going about. This is his experiment: He took two dogs and gave them both the same quantity of food. One of them was allowed to go to sleep, the other was taken out hunting. At the end of three or four hours he killed both of these dogs. The food in the stomach of the dog which had been asleep was quite digested; in that of the one which had been hunting the food was not digested at all.

This fact, I think, shews the advisability of going to sleep immediately after eating. This ignored fact always occurs to my memory when I see old gentlemen nodding over their wine. Nature says to them: "Go to bed." They will not go to bed; but still nature will not allow her law to be broken, so she sends them to sleep sitting in the chairs. People therefore who feel sleepy after dinner ought to dine late, and go straight to bed when a sleepy feeling comes over them.

Most good folks, however, do the worst possible thing imaginable—they retire altogether into the drawing-room, and then, to make matters worse, they drink tea and coffee. Now I regard tea and coffee, when taken at night, to be poison to certain constitutions. It is very well in the morning, but it is very bad at night. The reason why tea and coffee should not be taken at night is that the one contains an alkaloid called theine, and the other contains an alkaloid called caffeine. These two alkaloids, taken into the system, stimulate the brain and do not allow it to go to rest. I speak of this matter from experience. If I thoughtlessly take a cup of tea or coffee after five o'clock in the evening, going to bed about eleven, I cannot go to sleep; the alkaloid will wake me up in about an hour or two. Sleeplessness, therefore, is usually caused by tea or coffee, though strange to say that tea and coffee actually send some people into sound slumber.

I well recollect the late Dr. Wilberforce, then Bishop of Oxford, telling my father, then most actively engaged as Dean of Westminster, of his patent way of going to sleep. It is better than the old-fashioned prescription of watching sheep jumping through a hedge, one after another, ships sailing out to sea, etc. The Bishop's prescription was to repeat very slowly the vowels A E I O U. In doing this they were to be faintly pronounced with each inspiration and expiration. It will be found easy to do this without moving the lips; but the vowel U must not be pronounced, for to do this the muscular actions of the lips necessarily take place, and sleep comes not. I advise my readers to try this plan.

The deepest sleep is always just before dawn. It is, I believe, probable that some change takes place at this time in the atmospheric condition, as the hour just before dawn is selected by savages to make their attack, and it is at this time also, I believe, that a great proportion of the children are born. When staying at a country house, unfortunately, the visitor not accustomed to country sounds gets woke up. The abominable cocks begin their horrible crowing, called in Herefordshire "cock shoot." I recollect on one occasion, after the wretched cocks had gone from the fowl-house to feed, I fell asleep, and then there came a most awful cry of agony; in fact, the farmer killed a pig under my window—enough to wake anybody. This pig was most vociferous, but as he was immolated in honor of my arrival I could not say much.

I now venture to suggest a new but simple remedy for want of sleep. Opiates in any form, even the liquor opii sedat, and chloriodine, will leave traces of their influence the next morning. I therefore prescribe for myself—and have frequently done so for others—onions; simply common onions raw, but Spanish onions stewed will do. Everybody knows the taste of onions; this is due to a peculiar essential oil contained in this most valuable and healthy root. This oil has, I am sure, highly soporific powers. In my own case they never fail. If I am much pressed with work, and feel I shall not sleep, I eat two or three small onions, and the effect is magical. Onions are also excellent things to eat when much exposed to intense cold. Mr. Parnaby, Troutdale Fishery, Keswick, informed me that, when collecting salmon and trout eggs in the winter, he finds that common raw onions enable him and his men to bear the ice and cold of the semi-frozen water much better than spirits, beer, etc. The arctic expedition, just now about to start, should therefore take a good stock of onions. Finally, if a person cannot sleep, it is because the blood is in his brain, not in his stomach; the remedy, therefore, is obvious: call the blood down from the head to the stomach. This is to be done by eating a biscuit, a hard-boiled egg, a bit of bread and cheese, or something. Follow this up by a glass of milk, or even water, and you will fall asleep.—Land and Water.

Do Missions Pay?

Dr. Reid, one of the missionary secretaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, alluded to this question in a recent address in Cincinnati. We give some of his remarks, as reported by the Western Christian Advocate:

Dr. Reid said there were two parties engaged in carrying on the work. They are God and man. God's part will be well performed; the only doubt is whether we will be found doing our part. Our great Leader has gone ahead of us; but we have lagged behind till it becomes a most important question whether we must not call him back, saying that we are not prepared to go so fast.

INDIRECT RESULTS.

Look now at some of the results of all the past toil. Looking at merely the human side of missions, they pay. The missionary work is eminently humanitarian, and necessarily so. The humanitarian results are so blessed that they are sufficient of themselves to pay for all the sacrifices that have been made. A few years ago we heard of mothers casting their children into the Ganges. We hear of that no more. Not long ago Hindoo widows were burning on the funeral pyre of their deceased husbands. They burn no longer. It was one of our missionaries in a South American republic who drew up the bill, which passed the Legislature, prohibiting bull-baiting and cock-fighting in that country.

IMPOVERISHING THE COUNTRY.

We are sometimes told that we are sending large sums of money out of the country, and are impoverishing it. But look at the facts. In a commercial point of view missions pay. In my boyhood the Sandwich Islands were a heathen country, with no commercial intercourse with other nations. They are now Christianized. They have more wants now, and those wants furnish a market for our productions. They also produce more to supply our wants. Last year our commerce with the Sandwich Islands amounted to $5,000,000. The profit on their commerce was $700,000. The total cost of the missions which produced this commerce was not more than $1,200,000. So you see two years' commerce pays all the cost of Christianizing the islands, and leaves a profit of $200,000, and all the profit of commerce thereafter is clear gain.

Dr. Reid showed that a similar profit had accrued to England from her efforts to Christianize Africa. The Modoc war cost $1,000,000; but one-tenth of that sum spent ten years ago in an effort to Christianize the Modocs would have prevented, in all human probability, the war. All these are only temporal aspects of the case. Of course the spiritual results are the results aimed at in the bestowment and outlay of missionary money, and these stupendous results mainly all other results.

The Apostles' Creed.

HISTORY OF ITS USE IN PUBLIC WORSHIP.

The apostles' creed can be traced down to the second century. Its authorship has been erroneously attributed to the apostles, and even to Christ himself. It was not composed by one person at a particular time, but received additional articles and modifications of its form of expression from time to time, until it was completed in the form in which it has been transmitted by the ancient to the modern church.

It is called the apostles' creed not because it can be shown that they composed it, but because it was compiled by the fathers from their writings, and constitutes a summary of the truths they taught.

Luther says concerning its origin and character: "We have neither made nor conceived this confession, nor did the ancient fathers; but as the bee seeks her honey from numerous breathing flowers, so has this symbol been collected from the books of the blessed apostles and prophets—that is, from the entire Holy Scriptures, in a compendious form, for children and illiterate Christians. For this reason a person may safely call it the Symbol of Faith of the Apostles, for it is so arranged that no one can compose a better and more excellent one in so brief and clear a style. And the opinion has prevailed in the church from ancient times that either the apostles composed it themselves, or it was composed by their best scholars from their writings or sermons."

In the primitive church the apostles' creed was classed among its mysteries, and hence it was not introduced into public worship. But so weak were the considerations for restricting the use of the creed to the catechumens in the presence of the faithful alone, at their baptism, and so strong were the reasons for the confession of Christ by his disciples before all men by the use of this "form of sound words," that its use in the public services of the sanctuary could not be long delayed. Peter Fullo, a bishop of Antioch, is said to have been the first who introduced the custom of regularly reading the creed into the Christian church, in the year A. D. 474. His example was followed by Timothy, Bishop of Constantinople, in 511. The Council of Toledo, which met in 589, under the advice of the King, resolved that the Nicene creed should be repeated in all the churches of Spain and Gaul, as it had become customary in the worship of the Eastern churches. Hence this practice spread through France and Germany under the Emperor Charles the Great, but failed to find entrance into Rome. Leo, the Pope, was opposed to the custom, and advised Charles to abrogate it, but without success. And it was not until the year A. D. 1014 that the repetition, or rather the singing of the creed, became an integral part of the mass, or liturgical service of the Romish Church, and in which it has been retained until the present time.

Luther approved of the use of the creed in the public worship of the evangelical churches. He composed the hymn, "Wir glauben all an einen Gott," and recommended the singing of the creed or its repetition in both his liturgies. Zwingle retained the use of the creed in his liturgy, and Calvin did the same in his Genevan order of worship. And, in imitation of the example of these reformers, the Reformed churches of France and Germany, and the Episcopal Church of England, as well as the Lutheran Church on the Continent, have given the singing or repetition of the apostles' or Nicene creed a place in the public worship of God.—Lutheran Observer.

A GOOD HAMMER.—Twenty-nine years ago, when David Maydole was a roadside blacksmith, at Norwich, N. Y., six carpenters came to the village from the next county to work upon a new church, one of whom, having left his hammer behind, came to the blacksmith's to get one made, there being none in the village store.

"Make a good one," said the carpenter—"as good a one as you know how."

"But," said the young blacksmith, who had already considered hammers, and had arrived at some notion of what a hammer ought to be, and had a proper contempt for cheapness in all its forms, "perhaps you don't want to pay for as good a hammer as I can make."

"Yes, I do; I want a good hammer."

And so David Maydole made a good hammer, that perfectly satisfied the carpenter. The next day the man's five companions came, each of them wanting just such a hammer, and when they were done the employer came and ordered two more. Next the storekeeper of the village ordered two dozen, which were bought by a New York tool merchant, who left standing orders for as many such hammers as David Maydole could make. And from that day to this he has gone on making hammers, until now he has one hundred and fifteen men at work. He has never advertised, he has never pushed, he has never borrowed, he has never tried to compete with others in price, because other men had done so. His only care has been to make a perfect hammer, to make as many such as people wanted and no more, and to sell them at a fair price.

DEATH OF TREGELLES AND EWALD. The Christian World of May 14 says: "Two distinguished scholars have recently passed away, leaving behind them important results of their literary activity. Dr. Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, the eminent classical and biblical scholar, who died at the age of sixty-three, had occupied himself more than thirty years in the preparation of a new edition of the Greek Testament. A considerable portion of his time was spent abroad in collating the ancient uncial manuscripts. He had barely completed the last chapters of Revelation when he was struck by paralysis, and the pen literally dropped from his hand. On the fifth instant Prof. Ewald, the celebrated Orientalist, died at his native town of Gottingen, in the seventy-second year of his age. At twenty he was nominated professor at the College of Wolfenbuttel, and subsequently held professorships at Gottingen and Tubingen. His 'History of the People of Israel up to the Advent of Christ' has been translated into several European languages; and his Hebrew grammar is a popular text-book. After the suppression of the kingdom of Hanover by Prussia Prof. Ewald espoused the cause of the fallen dynasty with so much vehemence that he was tried for high treason, but acquitted, and subsequently became a member of the North German Parliament."

LONG SERMONS.—As the weather grows warmer some people think sermons should grow shorter. I think the length of a sermon may be left to the judgment of the preacher, who, if he is a man of sense, will learn rightly to divide the word. An English clergyman has recently adopted a novel method of curing sleepiness under his discourses. Just as the people were rousing themselves at the end of the sermon he said, very quietly: "Well, my friends, that sermon does not seem to have interested you. I am very sorry for it; but there is a remedy for all things, and I have another in my pocket, which you will perhaps like better!" Then, to the dismay of the people, he proceeded to begin again, and preached another sermon steadily through to a more wakeful audience than he had seen for many a week.

A good story is just now told of the deacon of one of the colored Baptist churches in Virginia. He was asking a man to tell him where he could find a "fuss-rate new minister." "Why," said the man, "I thought you had a minister." "So we have," replied the colored deacon, "but you see we've just sent him in his resignation." We have known white congregations to do the same, but they didn't call it by that name exactly.—Irenæus, in New York Observer.

JOSEPH CURRY, who says he is Christ, and not long ago was driven out of Georgia for forming a free-love colony, has started a new religious society in Springfield, Mass. A negress is worshiped by him and his followers as Queen of Earth and Heaven. He and this woman now represent themselves as fasting forty nights, and they have nearly starved themselves in a vigorous observance of the rite. They are terribly emaciated, and so weak that they can hardly walk. Curry says that at the end of the forty days they will be transported to heaven in a chariot of fire.

HE that loses his conscience has nothing left that is worth keeping. Therefore be sure you look to that. And, in the next place, look to your health; and, if you have it, praise God and value it next to a good conscience; for health is the second blessing that we mortals are capable of—a blessing that money cannot buy. Therefore value it and be thankful for it.

LIVING on excitement is very expensive living.

Religious Intelligence.

—Twenty-five years ago the Universalists had five churches in Boston, and now they have but two.

—Dr. McCosh estimates that there are in the world 8,497,815 Presbyterian communicants, including Reformed.

—The police authorities of Posen have given notice to the Ursuline sisters who are not natives of Germany to leave the country within two months.

—The Evangelist churches in Jerusalem have about 400 members; the native Protestants in Galilee number from 500 to 600; there are 1,400 children in the Protestant schools in all Palestine.

—Drs. Ryerson, Wood, Green and other ministers of the Methodist Church in Canada officiated, April 26, in laying the corner-stone of a new church in the west end of the city of Toronto.

—A new religious belief is said to be gaining ground in Ohio. Its adherents are called Eternalists. They hold that the soul is immortal, and occupies a succession of bodies on earth, both of men and animals.

—Rev. R. Huzelton, of the Irish Contereuce, has been appointed to visit Canada and the United States on behalf of the new educational institution projected in Dublin. The proposed cost of the new building is $50,000.

—A writer in the Friends' Intelligencer raises the question of abolishing the women's meeting, which has long been a distinctive feature of government among the Quakers. He wants but one meeting, composed of both sexes.

—The Old Catholics have received a considerable addition to their numbers by the adhesion of the inhabitants of Grotte, a town of Sicily. They and their clergy, numbering about 8,000, have, it is stated, adopted the Old Catholic rite.

—The Reformed Presbyterian states that, in accordance with a request from the Board of Missions, an occasional visit will be made by the United States naval vessel to Latakieh, Syria, where the oppressive hand of the Turkish authorities has of late been felt so heavily.

—Another modern illustration of "the sacrifice of masses" comes to us from Germany. At Altotting, a celebrated pilgrimage place, 40,810 masses were ordered in 1874, and paid for with 20,405 florins. The average price of a mass was thus ten pence, and there were over 110 read daily.

—The Rev. W. H. Johnson, of South Carolina, who recently resigned the Protestant Episcopal ministry to join the Reformed Episcopal Church, and then changed his mind, has been restored to his old standing by Bishop Howe. The Southern Churchman intimates that it would not be sorry to see Mr. Latane go back.

—The Lutherans from the north of Europe have in this country eight synods, viz.: four Norwegian, three Swedish and one Danish, with 317 ministers, 907 congregations and 109,443 church members. They have also six colleges or theological seminaries, and eight religious newspapers, viz.: four Norwegian, three Swedish and one Danish.

—The German government has commenced a correspondence with several other governments in regard to the ambiguous character of the Pope's present relation to foreign governments. It is urged that he must be either a sovereign or a private person, and cannot be permitted to occupy an ambiguous and irresponsible position.

—Dr. Budington, of Brooklyn, delivered his twentieth anniversary sermon, April 25. When he came to the church in 1855 it had 100 members, and 1,200 more have been added to it; 100 have died; 500 have gone to other churches. A new house of worship has been built; the people have given $275,000 for the support of the worship at home, and $250,000 for benevolent work.

—Travelers from Europe report a marked change in the old Roman Catholic countries, Protestant preaching now prevailing in every important place, even in Spain, last to yield to the spirit of toleration. The new elements tell upon society and education, as well as upon religion and theology. In Rome a Baptist church is opened within the walls of the old city, and Garibaldi attends to express his great satisfaction at the progress of free principles and good fellowship.

—The Supreme Court of Ohio has just decided a case of importance to all churches, though having special reference to the Catholic Church. The treasurer of Hamilton county, O., decided that only church and school property was exempt from taxation, while Archbishop Purcell contended that the dwellings of the priests were included, and so the Superior Court of Cincinnati decided. The case was carried to the Supreme Court, which reversed the decision below, holding that residence property is taxable.

—The Christian Register says well: "Last Sunday the Rev. Dr. Ewer, in preaching on the defeat of Dr. DeKoven, claimed a victory for the Ritualistic party. He wondered that so early in the career of Catholicity 'twelve dioceses have dared to vote for a Catholic and twelve dioceses have presumed to vote against a Low Churchman.' Some people will think that Dr. Ewer is crazy because he derives comfort from such a signal defeat, but we discern a formidable method in his madness."

—There are 71 Congregational churches in Missouri, 66 of them having been formed within ten years. There are connected with them 51 ministers and 3,406 members, 836 having been added last year. In 1874 $16,379 was raised for benevolence, and $52,493 for parish expenses, which was an average of less than $800 for each church. There are two Congregational colleges—Thayer, at Kidder, in the north, and Drury, at Springfield, in the south part of the State. They are further apart than Yale is from Bowdoin, and are doing an important work.

Our Young People.

TRAINING-TIME.

Supper is over,
Now for the fun,
This is the season
Children must run.
Papa is reading,
Says of those boys:
"Pray did you ever Hear such a noise?"

Riding on "camels"
Over the floor;
See, one's a squirrel
Climbing the door.
There goes the baby
Flat in his nose;
Brother was trying
To tickle his toes.

Little he minds it;
Though he would cry,
Changed it to laughter
As Lyn galloped by.
Order is nowhere,
Fun is the rule;
Think they are children
Just out of school.

Home is their palace;
They are the kings,
Let them be masters
Of just a few things.
Only one hour
Out of all day
Give them full freedom,
Join in their play.

Do not be crusty,
Do not forget
You liked to manage—
Sometimes do yet.
Home will be sweeter
Till life is done
If you will give them
One hour of fun.

Ghost Stories.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

We lived at one time among a people many of whom devoutly believed in apparitions and wizards and witches, and all that horrible rout; and often have we heard the most thrilling stories—stories, we believe, in more senses than one. We had sent us for review, some little time ago, a book upon apparitions, which claims to be a narrative of facts; and, as we read it through, we said: "Yes, these were facts where they were done;" and we put the book aside, to be looked up somewhat nearer the end of the year, when our Christmas number might excuse our inserting one or more of the aforesaid facts.

We are afraid our readers will think us rather a Sadducee, but we are nothing of the kind, nor a Pharisee either; but we do not believe that in nine out of ten ghost stories there is a ghost of truth, and we are not quite sure that we believe the tenth one. The Wesley family undoubtedly were favored with a very noisy visitant of some sort, and we have no idea what it was; only there is no accounting for the noises which rats make in old houses any more than for the foul gases in new ones.

When we meet with a thing which puzzles us we pry into the cause as far as we can, and generally find it out; and if we cannot read the riddle we lay it by to be solved another day, never flying to the old-fashioned resort of dragging in the supernatural. We traced a spirit song, after much investigation, to a foot-warmer filled with hot water, which was being used by an invalid. We found a band of celestial visitants who whispered to us all night in a country house, and they turned out to be a nest of birds in a hole in the plaster of the wall at our bed-head, which hole nearly came through into the room.

Nothing supernatural has ever been seen by our eyes, nor do we think we shall ever be blessed with such visions while in this body; for after seeing Robert Houdin and other wonder-workers we are case-hardened against the whole set of tricks and sham spirits, and these are the parents of most of the marvels which set silly people's hair on end. As a general rule, when we hear of an apparition, or anything of the kind, we do not believe it to be other than an illusion or a falsehood. The most wonderfully well-attested narratives seldom bear investigation; they are built up upon hearsay and tittle-tattle, and will not endure a strict examination; like most rumors, they fall, like card-houses, as soon as the hand of truth touches them. Perhaps a few of them appear to be so far true that we may safely say that they are not yet accounted for except upon a supernatural hypothesis, but we should hesitate to say more. Some are evidently the result of strong imagination, and are true to the parties concerned, affecting their fears, and stamping themselves upon their minds too firmly to allow them to doubt.

In many cases religious delusions and errors create a tendency to visions and the like, and the most vigorous repression should be exercised by ministers and other persons of influence. A woman once called upon us in great trouble, for she had seen a human form at the foot of her bed. We suggested that it might be her own gown hanging on a peg. No, that could not be; she believed it was either the Lord Jesus or satan. We remarked that it did not matter a pin which it was, for many saw the Lord when he was on earth, and our Lord himself saw the devil, and yet was none the worse. To her, however, it was a test matter, and she informed us that she should have known all about it if she had seen its head. We inquired how that was, and to our astonishment she told us that she had a likeness of the Savior, and she should have known him by it, and thereupon pulled out of her pocket a small wood-cut, which was supposed by her to be like the altogether lovely One. Our reply was an urgent entreaty to burn the horrid thing at once, and to feel certain that if ever she saw anybody at all like that she might be sure that it was as likely to be Lucifer himself as the Lord Jesus. She was evidently greatly surprised, and we fell fifty per cent. in her estimation, for she had expected to have had the opinion of her own minister, a Methodist, contradicted by our authority. We told her that her minister was a very sensible man, and had dealt faithfully with her in telling her not to be deceived by optical illusions; we question, however, whether we shook her faith, for she had a budget of other wonders to tell us—only our declaration that they were "stuff and nonsense," and our plain statement of the spiritual character of true religion, made her cut the interview very short. Half-crazy people come to us in any quantity with such marvels, and we hope we have cured a good many by a little kindly raillery; but a considerable number leave us with the impression sadly confirmed in our minds that there are more lunatics abroad than there are in the asylums.

We do not affirm that ghosts have never been seen, for no one has any right to hazard so broad a statement; but all spirits, as such, must be invisible; and the two sorts of human spirits which we know of are both by far too seriously occupied to go roaming about this earth rapping on tables or frightening simpletons into fits. As for angels, though they also as spirits are not cognizable by the senses, no doubt they have been made visible to men; and there is no reason why they should not be made so now if God so willed it. It would certainly be a wonder, but we do not see that any of the laws of nature need to be suspended to produce it. We can readily believe that those messengers who keep watch around the people of God would be rendered visible to us and to others if some grand purpose could be accomplished thereby, and if the safety of the saints required it. Whether in these days angels or departed spirits ever do assume forms in which they can be seen is the question, and we have as yet seen nothing to lead us to believe that they do. Others assert that they have seen such things, but, as they generally admit that they would not have believed unless they had seen for themselves, we hope they will allow us to exercise the same abstinence.

Stories of St. John.

It was while St. John was residing at Ephesus that various stories were told of him which we do not find in the Bible. We cannot be certain that these stories are quite correct therefore, but they accord with all that was known of St. John, and they agree with the letters and epistles which he wrote at that time.

One of these stories is this: There came one day to Ephesus a sportsman who had heard so much of this wise old man that he went out of his way to see him, and his surprise was great when he found St. John engaged in gently stroking a partridge which he held in his hand. The sportsman could not help saying how surprised he was to see so great a man employed on anything so small. Then St. John said: "What have you in your hand?" "A bow," replied the sportsman. St. John asked: "Why is it not bent?" The sportsman replied: "Because, if always bent, it would lose its strength." "That is just the reason," said St. John, "why I play with the partridge. It is that my mind may be kept strong by not being always at work." What do we learn from this story, my dear children? We learn from it that St. John, and great and good men like him, are glad now and then to see you at play, and to play with you. We learn that kindness to dumb animals is a thing that God expects of us. There was an aged lady, very excellent, wise and wonderfully learned, who lived to be nearly as old as St. John was when he died; she was the famous Mary Somerville, who died last year in her ninety-second year. A very short time before her death she said: "I hope that the time may come when children shall be taught that mercy to birds and beasts is part of religion." Yes, it ought to be a part of our religion, and I trust that we shall make it so. Play too with your companions like St. John, remembering that all play and all holidays are given by God, like the unbending of the bow in the story, to help them to work better for the future.

There is another story told of St. John: When he was very old indeed—when he was almost one hundred years of age—he used to be carried into the market-place, and the people, old and young, used to gather around him to hear the farewell words of their venerable teacher whom they loved so much. He would say to them: "Little children, love one another." They would ask for something else, and he would say again: "Little children, love one another." Yet they would still ask for something more, and his reply every time was: "Little children, love one another." At last they said: "Why do you always say this and nothing else?" He said: "Because this is the best thing I have to say. If you really love one another, that is all that I have to tell you." What do we learn from this? We learn that the thing St. John was most anxious to teach was love to one another. This is the love which Jesus Christ wished to see in all his apostles, old and young. Keep it on as years advance. Always bear in mind that the first thing to be done is to try to help and befriend some one else. That will make you generous and just. That will make you active and courageous. That will make you feel how wicked it is to do wrong. That will help you to do good to men when yourselves grow up to be men. That will enable you to be the better able to do good. That will enable you to love God, who can only be loved by those who love their fellow-creatures. Therefore I end this address to you, as St. John ended his long life, by saying: "Little children, love one another."—Dean Stanley.

HOW TO DO GOD'S WILL.—A teacher was explaining to her class the words concerning God's angels, "Ministers of his who do his pleasure," and asked: "How do the angels carry out God's will?"

Many answers followed.

One said: "They do it directly."

A third: "They do it well."

And, after a pause, a quiet little girl added: "They do it without asking any questions."

HE who wishes to have a part in the heavenly paradise must first consent to form part of God's earthly farm, and suffer himself to be plowed and sowed and reaped.—Hedinger.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are requested to meet at the Seashore camp ground on Thursday, July 22.

Not Sectarian.

This is the commendatory clause in the notices of some institutions. Religious newspapers and other publications are described as without sectarian bias, and even some churches claim to be sailing under a neutral flag. There are institutions and publications that are evangelical without being sectarian. The American Bible Society, as it deals only in Bibles without note or comment, may be clear in this respect, and it should be. Schools and colleges under denominational control may be managed so as to give little offense to patrons of differing religious views. A church not sectarian is set off into a sect by the very profession. It is a not sectarian sect, however contradictory such terms may seem.

It is a very difficult thing not to be sectarian, even when we try. It is not so hard to be charitable and to find agreement in the most essential points of doctrine in our intercourse with our fellow-Christians. There may be love and the communion of saints at the same time that differences are recognized and held in a spirit of kindness and toleration. Let the churches get near to each other, work together, and keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of love, but let them also be honest in the maintenance of what they believe to be the truth.

Some things ought to be sectarian. Our preaching should be the exposition of the doctrines as we hold and understand them. Our children should be taught them according to the Methodist standards, and they should be made to comprehend what is peculiar to us in matters of doctrine and church polity. The points which differentiate Methodism from other denominations should not be ignored in our catechisms and Sunday school instruction. Schools and colleges under church control are supposed to be pervaded by an atmosphere somewhat denominational as well as Christian. The preaching, religious instruction and devotional exercises necessarily have something of a sectarian cast. It is both fair and expedient to display our own colors. Many people are looking for schools where the religious influence is decided, and where the doctrines imbibed are in accord with their own convictions. While our children are at home it matters little whether the schools they attend are anything more than means of mental discipline, and literary and scientific attainments. The public schools, as institutions of the State, and maintained for the benefit of all classes, are necessarily without religious character. But when our children are sent from home the religious training becomes all-important. As Methodists, our preference is naturally for a Methodist institution, in which the teachers are of our own way of thinking, and where the religious instruction and all the moral influences are in accord with our own conceptions of the gospel. The attempt to conduct a Methodist school so as to suit Jews, Catholics, and all denominational creeds, must be surrounded with great difficulties, and if successful is likely to be at the expense of those who wish their children to be brought under the doctrinal convictions of Methodism.

Sectarianism is not altogether a bad thing. The attempt to eliminate it from our pulpits, Sunday schools, colleges and literature is unwise, and is sure to lead to weakness and religious decay. Religious breadth and charity consist perfectly with strong sectarian convictions. To be without a spice of sectarianism is generally to be without any decided religious opinions whatever. Usually the most zealous and spiritual are those who have reached well-defined views, and who have a strong and enthusiastic affection for some one branch of the church. An organic union of all the denominations would lead to far greater evils than any which grow out of the abuse of sectarian differences. Their separation is a powerful testimony against the papal dogma of corporate union as essential to salvation. Even the controversies and competition of the churches tend, on the whole, to purity of doctrine and to increased activity in spreading the gospel. In its reason to be a church looks to its doctrines and government; but through these, and beyond them, is an end which they subserve in striking at the root of a great error, and in preventing that corruption which a vast and world-wide organization would engender.

Not sectarian is a motto capable of abuse and misapplication. It is a flag sometimes run up as a disguise; sometimes it floats on the wrong craft, and indicates a doubtful policy. Let us by all means be Christian, let us eschew bigotry and rejoice in a common faith. But at the same time let us not neglect the doctrines and usages which belong peculiarly to the life and history of Methodism. Our people and their children must have Methodist theology, Methodist experience, and they must be trained in the use of our peculiar means of religious life. While striking hands with all who love the Savior, and joining with all in an alliance, offensive and defensive, against sin, let the Methodist flag fly at the fore of our own ship, and let us sail under our own colors.

Education Devoted to Christ.

The measure of devotion demanded is uniform. There is, however, some leading exhibition. It strikes with special power upon the best and the greatest things we have. If there is anything in us more eminent than another it is that which God singles out as his peculiarly. If wealth is the distinguishing possession, consecration lies chiefly in the use of it for Christ. If it be genius, talent, eloquence or learning, this particular distinguishing gift or endowment is the offering required of us. Our best things—our highest capabilities—are the exponents of our entire religious character. If these are laid at the feet of the Savior, they carry all else with them. If they are withheld, all other offerings are expressions more of selfishness than of love.

Education is a gift capable of usefulness in higher degrees, and in more ways than any other. It is probably as often withheld from God and wasted on selfish ends as riches. Not unfrequently it is retired from every profitable use, and is buried in idleness or in pursuits which afford no sphere for its improvement. It is a possession which lies fallow, or, if actively employed, it is exclusively directed to worldly ends. Cultivated minds, trained in the discipline of colleges and universities, can do much in the promotion of the gospel. They are qualified to be more effective witnesses and more efficient workers for Christ than those who have had no opportunities of liberal scholarship. They should be foremost in the enterprises of the church, and the advantages they have enjoyed should be made to tell in many ways.

It is not always so. Often the educated men of a congregation are the last to assume responsible places, and to enter heartily upon the more onerous offices and duties. Education may be the means of procuring wealth, of securing social position and influence, and through these of contributing to the spread of religious truth. The educated man can write, he can teach, he can preach the gospel. But, leaving these directions of activity out of the account, the educated layman is needed in the several departments of church work. In the Sunday school, as superintendents and teachers, there is demand for the highest intelligence and cultivation. For stewards and class leaders men of the best abilities are needed. We covet for the church, in her devotional services, in her social assemblies, and in all her personal work, the educated men, many of whom, though members, are scarcely known or felt in her affairs. We would bring them into more direct and vital connection with the performance of religious duties, and make their gifts more potent and available in the cause of religion.

The superior usefulness of educated men, where they are spiritual and zealous, makes us more anxious to see this element of good fully developed and laid upon the altar. It is a mighty power when combined with spirituality and brought under the control of consecration to Christ. In our educational enterprises much depends upon the zealous and liberal co-operation of those who know their character and value. Educated Christian men are to leaven the mind of the church on this subject, and to lead in the patronage and endowment of institutions of learning. They know their value better than others, they more perfectly comprehend the necessity of a high grade of education. An appeal to them should require but little argument. They have the intelligence and experience that enable them at once to appreciate the subject. In all the great interests of the church—in missions, in church-building and organization, and in the business of our Conferences—there is need of laymen who have breadth of view, well-disciplined faculties, large intelligence and sound judgment.

Men of this class are generally busy, absorbed in professions or other important pursuits, and often, for this reason, are kept aloof from active participation in church affairs. Perhaps the greatest trouble with many is that they fail to realize their peculiar obligations as educated men, and that the church has special need of their services. The buried talent is not money alone, nor is it the native intellect prostituted to ignoble ends, but it is education and its capabilities withheld from Christ.

As our young men leave college with their well-merited diplomas, let them pause upon the threshold before they depart, and put their education upon God's altar as probably the most precious thing they can devote to his service and glory. Whether the chosen pursuit be law, medicine, literature or agriculture, determine to meet manfully the first and highest responsibility. However education may prepare for success in life, and be the means of securing wealth and fame, it must above all contribute to our influence and usefulness as Christians. As it fits men to lead in secular callings, so it should be the means of eminent good in the religious life, and place its possessors in the van for liberal devising and self-denying labor.

Catholic Unity in Spain.

If the news from Madrid which we printed yesterday is to be believed, the papal cabinet has made an outrageous demand, and met with a deserved repulse in an unexpected quarter. It is stated that the Pope's nuncio has formally demanded the restoration of Catholic unity in Spain, and that the government of King Alfonso has replied that it was determined to maintain the liberty of worship guaranteed by the constitution of 1869. Catholic unity is a sufficiently innocent phrase, but it means the absolute prohibition and outlawry of every other form of religious worship in the kingdom. It was energetically enforced by Charles the Fifth and his pious son, Philip the Second, who killed some forty thousand thinking men in the cause of unity. This put a stop to thinking in that country for several hundred years. Even so recently as the late reign of Queen Isabel the Second, if you wanted to pray in any form not recognized by the authorized missals you had to lock your doors and take good care of the key-holes, or you ran the risk of being denounced for keeping a disorderly house. There was no pretense whatever of any public form of worship other than that enforced by the law. A few rebellious spirits adopted and held on to the evangelical faith all the more persistently because it was unlawful, and several of the leaders passed most of their time in jail for circulating Bibles and trying to hold prayer meetings. The secret Protestant propaganda never gained much real foothold in the Peninsula, but there was so much discussion among foreigners and among those revolutionary Spaniards who passed a great proportion of their time in exile, and thus became infected with foreign ideas, that when the Queen was driven away in 1868 it was taken as a matter of course that religious liberty to a certain extent should be incorporated in the new constitution. Not that it was especially demanded by any considerable number of Spaniards in the interest of Protestantism, but because it seemed required by the spirit of the age and the very nature of modern civilization. In the debates in the Cortes which led to the adoption of that article in the constitution no one affected to speak for the Protestants. The article was defended principally by rationalists, and attacked by Jesuits and Carlists. After it was adopted it was considered rather a theoretical than a practical provision. One liberal Spaniard said: "I think it well enough to have this article in the constitution, but I cannot conceive of a Spaniard who shall not be a Catholic." This impression was general in the Cortes, and led to the singular phraseology of the article providing for religious liberty. It gives foreigners in Spain the right of practicing their own religion, whatever it may be, and adds that if any Spaniards should profess any other faith than Catholic they shall have the same privileges in Spain as foreigners. We have no evidence that the new system of toleration fostered Protestantism to any great extent. A young American established several churches and Sunday schools in Madrid and other places, but it was doubtful if all of them together would have afforded an audience for Mr. Moody.

When Don Alfonso came back his government did all they could to discourage the Protestants and strengthen the church. They turned over to the ecclesiastics the control of the schools, and dismissed from their chairs in the university the most famous writers and scholars in the country, because they protested against these reactionary measures. Still they did not think it wise to offend and alienate the sympathy of the great powers of the North of Europe by absolutely abolishing religious liberty in fact and in form. Nothing would have been gained by such a performance, and it would have brought down the severest remonstrances from England, Germany and Russia. Yet, if this report is true, what the corrupt and bigoted cabinet of Madrid was too prudent to do has been demanded by the Roman curia. It can only seem to all laymen an egregious blunder. It was not needed. The church is sufficiently powerful in the Peninsula without the assistance of laws or the prosecution of heresy. There is no heresy to speak of, and the outlawry of the little that exists would only give it strength and vigor. Besides, at a time when the church is engaged in a mortal struggle in Germany against the State, it is the worst possible policy to disclose a plan of tyranny and persecution in a country where it is practically master of the field. The wisest friends of the church have long seen that its best interests were subserved by an entire separation from the civil authority everywhere. The attempt to abolish religious liberty in Spain, and to grasp at the school fund in the United States, is not harmonious with the claim made in Germany that the church is there fighting merely for spiritual freedom.—New York Tribune, May 19.

Books and Periodicals.

LOVE ENTHRONED. Essays on Evangelical Perfection. By Daniel Steele, D. D. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1875.

The subject is Christian perfection. The views are mainly those held by Wesley, Fletcher and other early Wesleyan writers. An infection of nature, or inbred corruption, remains in believers after justification, regeneration and adoption. Perfect love is a second and distinct blessing, in which this corruption is removed. Dr. Steele states the subject with great clearness, and is accurate and discriminating in his definitions. The metaphysics and philosophy of this experience are exhibited with much acumen, and the exegeses of Scripture in support of the theory are plausible if not conclusive. The author writes from the fullness of a personal experience, and his work breathes the spirit of moderation and love. The chapter on deliverance from artificial appetites savors to us of extravagance. The grace of God in the conversion of the soul we believe to be the only sure deliverance from bondage to the appetites; but the physical miracle involved in an instantaneous deliverance from the taste for whisky or tobacco is hardly to be credited. The instances, however, are given, and may go for what they are worth. There are allusions to the late war which we regard as in bad taste—an overstraining of Scripture to support a theory—and some rather serious typographical errors. On the whole, Dr. Steele's book is, for clearness of statement and method, for spiritual insight, and for exemption from fanaticism, the best we have seen for a long time in support of this theory of Christian perfection. We have read it with much pleasure and profit.

The author gives a brief statement of the nature of perfect love after the old Wesleyan manner, showing what it is not, and what it is. The object, however, is to treat especially of consecration as the means of attaining perfect love. Dr. Steele says that consecration bears the same relation to entire sanctification that repentance does to justification. So Dr. Carter affirms that "a perfect consecration must always precede the reception of a pure heart." Dr. Carter declares that a certain amount of knowledge after conversion is necessary to the attainment of perfect love, and that perfect consecration cannot be made at the time of justification. Whether the relation of perfect consecration to the author's theory of perfect love be right or wrong, his exhibition of the duty of Christian consecration cannot be otherwise than instructive and beneficial to devout readers. In separate chapters he treats of Life Consecrated, Time, Thought, Words, Food, Dress, Integrity in Business, Social Tastes, Money Consecrated.

OUR KING AND SAVIOR, OR THE STORY OF OUR LORD'S LIFE ON EARTH. By Daniel Wise, D. D. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden

This life of Christ is written especially for youth. The style is simple, and the story of the Savior's life is told in a manner to interest and attract the young. It is an excellent work for Sunday school libraries, and for the young people at home. A mother can find few better books to read to her children on Sunday afternoons. Excepting, of course, the head of Christ which disfigures the frontispiece, the numerous illustrations are pleasing and helpful, and the typography and paper are of the best.

COMMENTARY ON THE OLD TESTAMENT. Volume 4. Kings to Esther. By Rev. Milton S. Terry, A. M. D. D. Whedon, LL. D., editor. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1875.

This is the fourth volume of a projected commentary on the Old Testament, to be issued by the Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The whole is to consist of eight volumes, uniform with Dr. Whedon's Commentary on the New Testament. This volume is the only one of the series on the Old Testament that we have seen. It is necessarily much condensed, but there is good judgment and sound scholarship in the choice and use of material, and for popular use the work meets a want long felt. It is a volume of 534 pages duodecimo, contains notes on seven books, is copiously illustrated with cuts and maps, and embraces the best results of biblical investigation down to the present time.

THE LIVING WESLEY, AS HE WAS IN HIS YOUTH AND IN HIS PRIME. By James H. Rigg, D. D. With an introduction by John F. Hurst, D. D. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1875.

In a 12mo of 269 pages Dr. Rigg has given us perhaps the truest portrait of Wesley of any of the many biographers of this extraordinary man. Part 1 is a notice of Wesley's biographers and critics, in which he gives a very just estimate of their merits. Part 2 treats of Wesley's character and opinions in his earlier life, to the period of his evangelical conversion. Part 3 discourses of John Wesley after his conversion in the maturity of his powers. We believe no new material appears in this volume, but there is much sound criticism in what has been presented by others, and a truer construction put upon facts which have been long before the public. "The Living Wesley" announces the author's purpose. It is to give the real character, the actual life, and to ascertain the precise significance of circumstances and events that have been exhibited in detail in the voluminous work of Tyerman. Good judgment, clear and forceful discrimination, and a deep and just insight of character are exhibited throughout. The work is a valuable contribution to the extensive store of literature on this apparently inexhaustible subject, and, so far as it goes, is the most judicious and satisfactory of all.

A story on church history, in which we have a narrative of personal interest connected with the annals of Christianity in the days of Athanasius, Chrysostom and Augustine. The religion of the book is sound and instructive, and the historical information is presented in an entertaining form. We do not regard this as the best way to teach religious history, but it may be the means of awakening interest where simple histories and biographies would be neglected. Certainly it is infinitely better than the godless and aimless trash with which the press of the day is teeming.

A purely library volume, in which the author treats of The Beautiful, What is Poetry, Style, Dante and His Latest Translators, Sainte Beuve, the Critic, Thomas Carlyle, Errata, National Drama and Usefulness of Art.

FLAVIA, OR LOYAL UNTO THE END. A tale of the church in the second century. By Emma Leslie. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

Another historical tale detailing the trials of Christians in the times of Marcus Aurelius, and exhibiting the courage and fidelity with which they met persecution and death. We have a description of the church in the catacombs, an account of the death of Polycarp, and much historical information interwoven in the thread of the story. It is well written, a wholesome and instructive book for young people, and well adapted to strengthen their faith and religious convictions.

BINNEY'S THEOLOGICAL COMPEND IMPROVED. By Rev. Amos Binney and Rev. Daniel Steele, D. D. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1875.

This is a new edition of a little volume first issued nearly forty years ago. It is a very convenient work of reference for Bible classes, preachers, and all who wish for a brief summary of the evidences, doctrines, morals and institutions of religion. The Scripture proofs are given in connection with the statement of the subjects. It is a small and cheap volume, but packed with Bible truth, presented in a clear and methodical order. The very thing for Sunday school teachers, and for all who wish for a condensed view of systematic theology.

WOLF RUN, OR THE BOYS OF THE WILDERNESS. By Elijah Kellogg. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1875.

Mr. Kellogg is a prolific writer in the way of stories for the young. Not much merit in his books, and nothing particularly objectionable in them. Wolf Run has a great deal in it about frontier life, Indian fights, bears and wild adventures. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

OCEAN-BORN, OR THE CRUISE OF THE CLUBS. By Oliver Optic. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1875.

The sixth and last volume of the Yacht Club Series. It is a story of adventure on the sea, of love, romance and most improbable incidents. It may be entertaining, but it is scarcely worth the time of even a young person to read it. This flood of story-books is really appalling. For sale by R. J. Harp, Southern Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

D. R. Locke is the Petroleum V. Nasby of the press. This book is in short chapters, on all sorts of subjects, treated with wit, humor, sarcasm and some wisdom. It is very well described as Eastern fruit on Western dishes. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

OUTLINE OF CHURCH HISTORY. By John F. Hurst. New York: Nelson & Phillips.

The Outline contains 98 pages 12mo, is designed for the use of teachers and advanced classes in Sunday schools, and embraces the entire history from the apostolic period to the present day. It is emphatically multum in parvo.

THE GALAXY comes out with the July number in an entirely new costume, and the effect of the new type and fine tinted paper admirably corresponds with the freshness of the contents, gratifying the eye as well as the mind of the reader. Contents: Dear Lady Disdain, chapters 16, 17 and 18, From a Convent, Alexandre Dumas, A Remembered Critic, Can the Trip to Europe be Shortened? My Experiences, A Napoleonic Legend, English Lecturers in America, A Nuptial Sonnet, Leah—a Woman of Fashion, chapters 27, 28 and 29, On Some Pictures Lately Exhibited, Bunker Hill, Parrot Wheezers, Driftwood, Scientific Miscellany, Current Literature, Nebulæ.

We have in this number: Jack's Independence Day, How the Grasshoppers Came, American Orators, The Wild Sheep and the Tame, The Young Surveyor, How to Make a Boat, and many other excellent things. This is the second number issued, and shows much improvement on its predecessor. The Valley Monthly is edited by W. M. Leftwich. Charles E. Ware & Co, publishers, St. Louis. Terms, $3 a year in advance.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for July is very liberally and handsomely illustrated. In the table of contents we note: Kearny at Seven Pines, The City of the Golden Gate, The Girl at Studder Grange, A Farmer's Vocation, The Story of Seven Oaks, Darwinism.

A PRIVATE NOTE from Rev. Joel T. Davis, dated June 16, advises us of his safe arrival in the City of Mexico, on Saturday, June 12. He speaks of missionary interests as moving forward finely.

"The newspaper is already in every family; the religious journal must be there too. The pulpit, with its hour of admitted reguancy on Sunday, can do much, but it cannot do all. The preacher cannot follow his flock to their homes, and into all their several vocations throughout the week, as the newspaper can. The religious paper, therefore, if it is such as it ought to be, will be for the minister and the evangelist as the right arm of their power. True, the religious press will be likely to have small enough circulation in a place where there is no Christian pastor; but, on the other hand, the pastor, however faithful, without the religious paper in the families of his parish will find his best efforts balked and crossed, and set back at almost every turn, by adverse influences from other sources. If it be said that religious journalism might be improved, we will not contradict; only add that, modestly spoken, the same may be said of the pulpit. But there cannot possibly be any jealousy between the two. They are co ordinate factors, with most intimately allied functions in the gloriously inspiring work of bringing the gospel of Christ and human society into accord."

DEATH OF DR. LORE.—It is our sad duty, says the New York Christian Advocate, to announce the decease, on Sunday morning last, June 20, of Rev. Dallas D. Lore, D. D., editor of the Northern Christian Advocate. He was stricken with apoplexy and paralysis on Thursday last, at about five o'clock P. M., at his country home in Owasco, near Auburn, N. Y.

At the time of the attack he was apparently in his usual health, and was working about his grounds. Suddenly he left his work and started for the house, moving with an unsteady and faltering step. He seemed aware of the terrible nature of his symptoms, saying to his wife as she came to his assistance: "This is paralysis." These were his last words. In a short time the right side was entirely paralyzed, and he was unable either to see or hear. He continued to give indications of consciousness until about ten o'clock at night. From that time he remained wholly unconscious.

On Saturday morning his symptoms were thought to be a little more favorable, though not enough so to warrant any hope of his recovery. He lingered until Sunday, when, in the presence of his grief-stricken family and other friends, his spirit passed to the excellent glory.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.—A full and final notice of everything necessary to be known concerning this meeting will be found on our eighth page. All information will be found in that notice, and our readers are referred to it. Some people neglect to acquaint themselves with the arrangements until the last moment, and even start to the camp ground knowing nothing about the terms or means of entertainment. Let all read the notice, and cut it out and paste in a memorandum-book. There are many little details to be attended to, and almost certain to be forgotten unless well studied. Tent-builders and tent-holders should take time by the forelock, so that they may be free from worry, and well rested when the services begin on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July. Everybody should be in their tents and waiting to hear the blowing of the horn on Wednesday morning.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.—A friend, whose opinions we value, offers the following suggestion in reference to the best method of reading the Bible:

Mr. Editor: I have just arisen from the perusal of your article on Bible-reading. Will you allow me to suggest, too, that the various books of the Bible ought to be read chronologically? This, I am persuaded, is better than consecutively, as they stand in the book.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the programme of commencement exercises of Greensboro (Ala.) Female College. Rev. Dr. E. Wadsworth, of Mobile, delivers the commencement sermon on Sunday, July 4. The commencement exercises take place on Monday, July 5.

WE HAVE received the report of the Board of Commissioners of the Fifth Cincinnati Industrial Exposition, 1874; also rules and premium list of the sixth exposition, which opens September 8 and continues until October 9, 1875.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

REV. DR. M. S. ANDREWS, of Selma, Ala., sends us an excellent sketch of Rev. W. C. Robinson, which will appear next week.

REV. JOSEPH E. A. VANDUZER, missionary to the Cubans in Key West, Fla., died June 7.

UNHAPPY he who desires to do so long as there remains to him one sacrifice to make, one joy to create, troubles to prevent, tears to dry.—Madam Swetchine.

DR. ANDREWS, under date of Selma, June 23, says:

We are moving on pleasantly here. Crop prospects are the best we have had for years. Recent copious and pretty general showers make a good corn crop almost certain. Our people are taking heart again, and we begin to hope that the long night of disaster and gloom is about over.

THE union prayer meeting is held daily, at twelve M., in Dr. Palmer's church. The attendance and interest are reported to be increasing.

MARRIED.

LIDDELL—SCOTT.—At Ebenezer Grange Hall, in Jefferson county, Miss., by Rev. W. B. Lewis, April 21, 1875, William D. Liddell and Miss Olive S. Scott.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request of a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they did not always have the amount at the time the year closed, they would pay up when they could, we were led to give notice to our agents and subscribers, about five years ago, that "no paper would be stopped without an explicit order." Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid always before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper, do not direct the postmaster to return your paper. That will not stop it. Do not write upon it and return it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When you subscribe state that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so expressly order, send a postal card to reach us any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected these two simple methods, and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter inclosing pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly thereupon you may be assured your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, heading the notice "Second" or "third notice," when, on referring to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. But postmasters have been in many instances mistaken, and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Attend to it yourself if you want it done, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters, and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, will leave, July 1, for a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

STONINGTON LINE, BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON.—The readers of the ADVOCATE visiting Boston this summer will find the above line the most desirable route leaving New York. There are two departures in the day, one boat leaving Pier 21, East river, in the morning, and reaching Boston in season for a good night's rest. The other leaves at five o'clock, from Pier 33, North river, reaching Boston at six A. M. These steamers are among the largest, fastest and most elegant afloat, having all the modern conveniences and appliances for safety and comfort. Those who are seeking pleasure, and prefer the morning boat, will have an opportunity to enjoy a delightful inland sea voyage by daylight, and to avoid the suffocating dust of the cars. This line has no equal for promptness, dispatch and safety among the lines to Boston. It is presided over by D. S. Babcock, and Mr. E. A. Devean is the efficient agent of the company.

LOUISIANA SAVINGS BANK AND SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.—This reliable institution is located at 51 Camp street, and is under the efficient control of E. C. Palmer, president, John S. Walton, cashier, and the board of directors, whose names will be seen by referring to the advertisement on this page. Parties who wish to deposit their bank boxes can have the use of the magnificent safe for the low rate of $15 per annum. Deposits received and six per cent. per annum interest paid.

VANDALIA LINE.—Parties going North by way of St. Louis will bear in mind that the above line will land them in New York several hours in advance of any other road, being perfectly free from dust, etc., with double track and stone-ballasted roads, and every precaution against danger that is practicable. Col. Simpson is the general superintendent, who is considered one of the best railroad men in the country.

THE ARROW TIE.—On this page will be seen the advertisement of the unrivaled Arrow Tie. These ties are so well known throughout the cotton States that it is unnecessary for us to do more than call attention to the fact that Messrs. R. W. Rayne & Co. have lately reduced the price for them. The firm above named are the general agents for the United States, and have their office at 48 Carondelet street.

PRATT'S COTTON GIN.—Elsewhere in to-day's paper will be seen a cut of the improved "Revolving Head" Cotton Gin. This is a late patent, and it is claimed that the market price of cotton is materially enhanced by its use. The price is $4.50 per saw. Messrs. Jos. B. Wolfe & Co., 50 Carondelet street, are the general agents. Any letters addressed to them will be promptly and satisfactorily attended to.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE. This superior school for young ladies is in Abingdon, Va., among the mountains, twenty-one hundred feet above the sea level. The location is healthful and terms moderate. The sixteenth annual session begins September 16. Maj. R. W. Jones is president, and Rev. H. P. Myers secretary. For further information read the advertisement.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in calling attention to the card of Dr. C. J. Bickham. The doctor is well known as a skillful physician. His office and residence are at the corner of Magazine and Second streets.

WE REFER our readers who have goods to be stored to the advertisement of H. M. Isaacson, of the Boston and Lafayette warehouses. Goods of every description stored at reasonable rates.

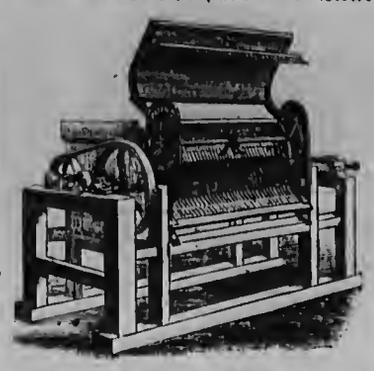
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Seasonable Hints About Fruits and Vegetables.

If large fruit is wanted, thinning assists. Strawberries are increased in size by watering in a dry time. Fruit-trees should be allowed to bear only according to their strength. If a transplanted tree grows freely it may bear a few fruits; but bear in mind that growth and great fruitfulness are antagonistic processes.

Handsome forms are desirable in fruit, as in ornamental trees. No winter pruning will do this exclusively. It may furnish the skeleton, but it is summer pinching that clothes the bones with beauty. A strong shoot soon draws all its nutriment to itself. Never allow one shoot to grow that wants to be bigger than others. Equality must be insisted on. Pinch out always, as soon as they appear, such as would push too strongly ahead, and keep doing so till the new buds seem no stronger than the others. Thus the good gets equally distributed.

When the strawberry crop is about to ripen, mulch with clean straw, to prevent rain soiling the fruit. Short grass from the lawn is often used; but it mildews as it decays, and detracts from the flavor of the fruit. Hot suns increase flavor, and strawberry tiles were once in fashion to put around the hills, which, by absorbing heat, added greatly to the fruit's rich quality. All that we have said of strawberries supposes them to be fruited on the hill system, with the runners kept off. Those who desire the best results will grow them in no other way, but many grow them very successfully in beds, believing that, though they may not have as many large fruits, they have a greater weight in proportion to the labor bestowed.

Where water can be commanded, there is nothing so profitable as to well soak the soil about the small fruits; first about the time that they have set their fruit. Much of the value of this operation, however, will depend on the nature of the soil. The advantages are least in a tenacious, and greatest in porous soil. It is said that an animal derives most benefit from food, when it is hungry, before it begins to eat; it is certainly so with plants. Water applied to soil already wet is an injury; and water never has so telling an advantage on vegetation as when every leaf is about to wither up for the want of it. A plant that never seems to want water is in a very doubtful condition in regard to its health.

Blackberries and raspberries, set out in spring, may kill themselves by overbearing. It is pardonable to wish for some fruit the first year. If a tree seems to be growing freely, some fruit may be left. Cut out black knot, or any symptoms of disease that may appear, and as they appear.

In the cultivation of garden crops, the hoe and rake should be continually at work. Weeds should be taken in hand before they are barely out at the seed-leaf, and one-half the usual labor of vegetable gardening will be avoided. Hoeing or earthing up of most garden crops is of immense advantage in nearly every case. One would suppose that in our hot climate flat culture would be much more beneficial; but a fair trial, say on every other row of a bed of cabbages, will show a great difference in favor of the earthed-up plants.

Cabbage, cauliflower, and brocoli are now set out for fall crops, and endive sown for winter salad. Lettuce also for summer and fall use. This, however, must be sown in very rich soil, and in a shaded situation, or it will go to seed. Peas, beans and other crops should be sown every two weeks. They do much better than when a large crop is sown at one time, and then have too many on at one time to waste.

Melons, cucumbers, corn, okra, squash, beans, sweet potatoes, Lima beans, pepper, egg-plants, tomatoes and other tender vegetables that do not do well till the sun gets high and the ground warm, should go into the soil without delay. Bean-poles should be set before the beans are planted; and near cities, where they are comparatively high-priced, their ends should be charred. This will make them last some years. Many find them to last as long when gas-tarred. Mr. Periam, of Michigan, uses no poles, but cuts off the runners as they appear, and the plant bears abundantly as a bush. Tomatoes do well tied to poles. In sowing seeds it is well to remember that, though the soil should be deep and finely pulverized, a loose condition is an favorable to good growth. After the seeds are sown a heavy rolling would be a great advantage! The farmer knows this, and we have often wondered that the practice never extended to garden work.—Gardeners' Monthly.

WATERPROOF PAPER.—French papers speak of a method of rendering paper extremely hard and tenacious by subjecting the pulp to the action of chloride of zinc. After it has been treated with the chloride it is submitted to a strong pressure, thereafter becoming as hard as wood and as tough as leather. The hardness varies according to the strength of the metallic solution. The material thus produced can be easily colored. It may be employed in covering floors with advantage, and may be made to replace leather in the manufacture of coarse shoes, and is a good material for whip-handles, the mounting of saws, for buttons, combs and other articles of various descriptions. An excellent use of it is in large sheets for roofing. Paper already manufactured acquires the same consistency when plunged, unsized, into a solution of the chloride.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

VALUE OF EVERGREEN TREES AMONG FRUIT-TREES.—A full-grown evergreen tree gives off continually an exodium of warmth and moisture, that reaches a distance of its area in height; and when the tree planters advocate shelter belts surrounding a tract of orchard of fifty or more acres, when the influence of such belt can only reach a distance of the height of the trees in said belt, they do that which will prove of little value. To ameliorate climate, to assist in prevention of injury against extreme climatic cold in winter, and of the frosting of the germ-bud of the fruit in spring, all orchards should have planted in and among them indiscriminately evergreen trees at distances each of not more than one hundred and fifty feet apart. Such a course pursued, we have no doubt, will render greater health to the trees, and be productive of more regular and uniform crops of fruit.

TOMATO CULTURE has been an important feature of farming in New Jersey for several years past, owing principally to such large quantities being used by the canning factories; but we have been informed by reliable parties that the demand for packing the coming season is likely to be very greatly diminished, there being so large a stock of the canned goods yet in the hands of the manufacturers and dealers, which are being sold at much less than they cost. The estimate of canned tomatoes on hand in Philadelphia alone at this date is over two hundred thousand cases of two dozen each, or four million eight hundred thousand cans.

WATERING MILK.—A conscientious New Hampshire milkman, who wants his cows to yield plenty of milk, but does not like to go to the pump after milking, gives them all the salt they care to eat, and allows each to drink all the water she wants—that is, generally about six pailfuls a day. The water is made tepid in winter. The annual gross receipts from these watered cows are $125 apiece, but it costs fifteen or twenty cents a day to keep each animal, so that very handsome profit must be cut down by $73 or less. That is certainly an unobjectionable way of diluting milk.

A SCOTCH DUKE who owns vast tracts of mountain land, of little value heretofore, has made them worth a rental of $2.50 per acre by planting acorns for bark alone. The acorns are planted thickly, and the growth cut when in the condition of "coppice wood," which is what we should call "underbrush." The bark on this small timber is more valuable than that from large trees, and the twigs are worth even more than the bark.

AN old manuscript book of "The Laws and Ordinances of Harvard College" has turned up in the hands of a Massachusetts man. It bears the date of 1665, and contains several queer things, among them the following:

"No scholar shal goe out of his chamber without a Gown, Cloak or Coat; and every one everywhere shal were modest and sober Habits, without strange, ruffian-like, or new-fangled fashions, without all lavish Dress, or excess of Apparel whatsoever, nor shal any wear Gold or Silver or jewels without just permission; nor shal any wear Long Haire, Locks, Foretops, Curlings, Crispings, Partings, or Powdrings of ye Haire.

"Nor shal any without the like reason take Tobacco; or bring, or suffer to be brought, into his chamber strong-beer, strong-water, or other inebriating Driuk.

"No Student shal, upon any pretense whatsoever, seeke the company, familiarity, or acquaintance of Persons of unjust or Dissolute life.

"Every undergraduate shal be called by his surname, except he be ye Son of a Nobleman, a Knights oldest Son, or a Fellow-Commoner.

"Every Fellow-Commoner shal bring a piece of silver plate to ye value of 3lb. at least, which he may have the use of while he shal abide at the College; and shal leave it to the Propriety of the College when he departeth from it."

THE CREATION OF WOMAN.—A prince once said to Rabbi Gamaliel: "Your God is a thief; he surprised Adam in his sleep, and stole a rib from him."

The rabbi's daughter overheard this speech, and whispered a word or two in her father's ear, asking his permission to answer this singular opinion herself. He gave his consent.

The girl stepped forward, and, feigning terror and dismay, threw her arms aloft in supplication, and cried out: "My liege, my liege, justice! revenge!)"

"What has happened?" asked the prince.

"A wicked theft has taken place," she replied. "A robber has crept secretly into our house, carried away a silver goblet, and left a golden one in its stead."

"What an upright thief!" exclaimed the prince. "Would that such robberies were of more frequent occurrence!"

"Behold then, sire, the kind of thief that our Creator was; he stole a rib from Adam, and gave him a beautiful wife instead."

"Well said!" avowed the prince. Talmud Sanhedrim.

A COMPETITIVE examination was lately held for the purpose of appointing fit persons to some of the government offices in England. One of the candidates inadvertently spelled the word Venice with two n's—thus, Vennice. The examiner—a clever man, but not always a correct speaker—sternly inquired: "Do you not know, sir, that there is but one nen in Venice?"

"Then eggs must be very scarce there!" was the ready reply.

The candidate passed.

EVERY true hero grows by patience. People who have always been prosperous are seldom the most worthy, and never in moral excellence the most strong. He has not been compelled to suffer, has probably not begun to learn how to be magnanimous, as it is only by patience and fortitude that we can know what it is to overcome evils, or feel the pleasure of forgiving them.

M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——, Professor of Natural Science; THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $12 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

—Specimens of the remains of the great extinct beaver, Castoroides Ohioensis—an animal closely allied to the beaver of modern times, but of giant size, being about five or six feet in length, and weighing probably from two hundred to four hundred pounds—have been exhibited before the Lyceum of Natural History, New York. This specimen was found at Nashport, on the Ohio canal, in a bed of peat, which was buried under strata of clay and sand, and apparently belonged to the same age as the forest bed found in the middle portions of the drift deposits of Ohio.

—According to Pliny, a gum which he calls benzoin was obtained from a plant named Silphium. Linnæus, however, gave the name to a North American genus of plants. There are none of these Silphiums in the Old World. The true Silphium of Pliny is believed by some to be the Thapsia Garganica, and the gum yielded by it is still one of the most valued products of Algeria. With the Arabs beauty in women is closely associated with fatness. Angelica Kauffman's "Vestal Virgin" would be despised. This Silphium is used by them for feeding wives, in order to produce the popular embonpoint.

—A Russian engineer named Sakhovsky has invented an apparatus—a kind of differential gauge—of very simple construction, which is said to have been found to work admirably at the Moscow terminus of the Nijni railway, and on several other lines. The apparatus consists of a beam about five feet long, provided at one end with an articulated lever, on the shorter arm of which is a stud that presses, by means of a spring, against the inner face of one of the rails, and at the other with a fixed stud; the beam is drawn along the rails by a man by means of shafts, or it may be attached to a truck. As the gauge proceeds along the line the deviations from the normal width between the rails is shown by the longer arm of the lever, which moves against a dial-plate.

WHAT MAKES THE SKY BLUE.—The ethereal blue color of the sky is due to minute particles of matter which float in the air. Were these particles removed the appearance of the sky would be dead black. It is a fact in optics that exceedingly fine portions of matter disperse or scatter the blue rays of light, coarser portions scatter red rays, still coarser portions scatter all the rays, making white light. The atmosphere is full of aqueous vapor, the particles of which diffuse white light in all directions. When the particles are enlarged they become visible in the form of clouds. That the diffusion of light in our atmosphere, the blue coloring of the sky and the colors of the clouds, are due to the presence of matter floating in the air, has been conclusively proven by Tyndall. On passing a beam of sunlight through a glass tube the beam is rendered brilliantly visible by the reflection of light from the dust particles floating in the air contained in the tube. But on removing the dust particles, which is done by filtering the air by cotton, wool, or causing the air to pass over a flame, the beam of light is no longer visible in the tube.—Scientific American.

THE COST OF PET BIRDS.—Some curious person has figured up the number of pet birds in the country, and what it costs to feed them, and arrives at the following result: The estimated number of canaries imported into the different ports of America prior to 1871, 200,000; in 1871-72 there were imported 150,000; in 1872-73, 350,000; in 1873-74, 300,000; total number imported, 900,000. The number of birds raised yearly in America about equal the number lost through various causes, so that the total of 900,000 is substantially correct for the number of canaries now in this country. Of all other birds, both song and plumage, there are about 100,000. The following estimate of seed consumed is based on actual observation of the actual amount of seed fed to 100 canaries: Clear canary seed, 117,000 bushels; rape seed, 20,250 bushels; hemp seed, 9,750 bushels, which cost the owners of the birds, at retail price, per annum, $223,000. The other 100,000 birds consume, in bushels, per annum, of various seeds, comprising millet, maw, lettuce, padda, cracked corn and wheat, fully 18,750 bushels, which cost $150,000, making a grand total of bushels consumed per year, 174,750, costing $373,000.

—Among certain persons—and the class is rather a numerous one—that which is comfortable is unconsciously considered to be wrong, and objectless self-mortification assumes the character of a virtue. Such persons never wear a topcoat, never have a fire in their bed-room, always shave with cold water, break the ice in their tub of a morning in order to bathe. They are apt to boast of these feats, and to look down upon their weaker fellow-creatures who do not imitate them. There is probably a remnant of old ecclesiastical terrorism in this—a trace of the "hair shirt and no shoes" of the pilgrims—which is singularly out of place at the present day. In the matter of the morning tub alone the absurdity is well shown. Our boasting friends loudly rejoice that they are not as other men are—the season makes no difference to them as regards their morning tub. Now granted that the cold-water bath is a good thing, I must be remembered that whereas in summer they immerse themselves in water about 20° or 30° cooler than their blood, in winter the difference of temperature may amount, as it has done lately, to no less than 50° or 60° Fahrenheit. To be consistent they should raise the temperature of the bath in winter to that which it has in summer. As they are inconsistent, they suffer very often from muscular rheumatism.—Lancet.

THERE is something great in the power of a Christian freeman; but nowhere does the devil build his little chapels more cunningly than right by the side of the temple of Christian liberty.—Besser.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$4.50 $4.50
By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. DOLSAN BROTHERS,

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending June 29:

On Saturday the market was inanimate throughout the day, only a few buyers coming forward, and the movement being checked by factors holding above the limits of pending orders. The sales were consequently confined to 225 bales. On Monday the demand continued limited, only four buyers participating in the business, but there was some inquiry from brokers, who were unable to find the kinds wanted at the ruling rates. Notwithstanding the decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool and the falling off in futures at New York, factors adhered to their previous pretensions. The sales were confined to 325 bales. On Tuesday the market opened under the influence of a further decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, where the sales were only 7,000 bales, and a reduction of ⅛c. in the quotations for spots at New York, only partially offset by easier freights and a slight improvement in foreign exchange. There was, nevertheless, some inquiry, but at prices which factors would not accept, and the sales were confined to 150 bales, at prices indicating that in some cases, when instructed to realize, factors were willing to make satisfactory concessions. Strict middling, for example, sold at 15½c., and good ordinary even lower in proportion.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 700 bales, against 1,650 for the corresponding time last week and 3,250 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 991,758 bales, against 1,206,763 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 284,131 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 287,092—3,406,899 against 3,753,991. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 5,781 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 28,725 to France, and of 179,491 to other foreign ports. We quote:

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The annual camp meeting on the Seashore camp ground will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, enjoying the healthful and refreshing sea breeze. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent or temporary tents thereon.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $10, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has sent to the camp ground a large amount of lumber suitable for building tents, to be sold at reasonable prices to persons wishing to build or improve their tents.

A number of tents are built for rent to individuals or families, some twelve feet by fourteen, at $10, others twelve feet by twenty-five, at $15 for the period of the camp meeting.

Provision is made for good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents each for breakfast, dinner and supper, or $1 25 per day. Lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

Arrangements have been made with the railroads for conveyance of passengers, at reduced prices, by the New Orleans and Mobile road, from New Orleans for $2.50, and from Mobile for $2, for the round trip, and proportionate prices from all the way stations. By Morgan's Louisiana and Texas road, the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago road, and the Mobile and Ohio road, at half the usual price of regular fare. The first two of these roads will issue a special camp meeting ticket, with return ticket. The other roads will furnish the ordinary ticket, which, punched by the conductor, will be retained by the passenger; and at the office of the camp ground the tickets will all be stamped by the secretary to make them good to return on. In New Orleans tickets can be had at the ticket office, corner of Camp and Common streets, and at the depot, at the head of Canal street; and in Mobile at the depot, foot of Government street, and at all the way stations on the roads.

Passenger trains will leave New Orleans at 8 o'clock A. M., and 3.15 and 4.40 P. M.; and Mobile at 6.15 A. M. and 5.30 P. M., all stopping at all the way stations, including camp ground station, except the 4.40 P. M. express train from New Orleans, which will stop at the camp ground and all the principal stations.

Freight trains will leave the depot, at the head of Girod street, New Orleans, and at the foot of Government street, Mobile, at 5 o'clock P. M., and take freight to and from the camp meeting at half the usual rates of charge.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, B. O. L. Rayne, J. H. Keller, G. W. W. Goodwyn, P. Hallahan and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

From this date to the commencement of the camp meeting some one or more of the trustees will be on the camp ground almost daily.

W. H. FOSTER, President.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BROOKLYN, July 2.—At 11.17 A. M. the jury came into the court, which was densely crowded, and stated they were unable to agree, when they were discharged. The jury stood nine for acquittal and three for conviction.

NEW YORK, July 2.—Admissions wrung by the reporters from the jury indicate that they were divided as follows: For Beecher—Messrs. Carpenter, Case, Thayer, Hall, McMurn, Halstead, Whelan, Taylor and Titler. For Tilton—Messrs. Jeffrey, Fiatte and Davis.

Mr. Taylor, in an interview with an Eagle reporter, said when the jury went out they stood pretty even. After the first day the average balloting stood eight to four, and finally the vote settled at nine to three. Their debates at times were very violent and demonstrative, but there was nothing like coming to blows.

NEW YORK, July 3.—Plymouth lecture-room was crowded to excess. Beecher's entrance provoked a loud ovation. Shearman led in prayer. He hoped Plymouth would join him in pledging their fidelity to Beecher, and, God helping, they would never leave him. No voice uttered from the press or pulpit could make them leave him, and ten thousand juries could not make them doubt his word. Beecher then gave out a hymn, pronounced the benediction and the audience dispersed. Mr. Beecher's address was confined wholly to church matters, including a running history of Plymouth.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—A telegram to the Navy Department from Key West reports one death and two new cases of yellow fever there to-day. The atmosphere and present indications are unfavorable.

NEW YORK, July 5.—To-day is one of general celebration here, though much firing was indulged in yesterday, when there were a number of accidents, as there will also be to-day.

A Key West dispatch reports there were no deaths from yellow fever on the third, but on the fourth there was one death, and a few new cases reported.

HARTFORD, July 5.—Rev. Robert G. Vermilye, D. D., for eighteen years professor of the Hartford Seminary, is dead.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 30.—A special to the Daily News says the number of men, women and children drowned in Toulouse alone is roughly estimated at two thousand.

Gladstone, in a magazine article, argues strongly that the Church of England is worth preserving.

The King of Burmah refuses to allow British troops to pass over his country. It is believed this condition will be insisted upon by the British.

PARIS, June 30.—The subscriptions received for the sufferers by the inundations are unprecedentedly large. Total to date, $200,000. The list opened by President MacMahon has already reached $40,000. It is announced that ten thousand persons will be wholly dependent upon public charity for months to come.

The damage to Toulouse and environs exceeds $26,000,000. Relief is passing in from all parts.

The Pope has sent $4,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the inundations.

PRAGUE, June 30.—Ex-Emperor Ferdinand is dead.

PESTH, June 30.—The loss of life from the tempest exceeds the first estimates. One hundred and twenty dead have been taken from the Danube. Doubtless many have floated down.

MADRID, June 30.—An ordinance was issued banishing members of Carlist juntas and all families of which any member is in the Carlist service, and confiscating their property.

It is officially announced that Gen. Martinez Campos has occupied positions on the river Ebro in order to prevent the escape of the Carlists from Valencia and Arragon into Catalonia.

BERNE, July 2.—The National Council voted twenty-five thousand francs to defray the expenses of a proper representation of Swiss products and industry at the Philadelphia Centennial exhibition.

Of the larger European States Russia is the only one which has declined to encourage a participation in the exhibition.

PARIS, July 2.—It is estimated that the destruction of property by the inundations in the southwestern portion of this country will amount to three hundred million francs. The number of persons who perished is estimated at three thousand. President MacMahon continues his tour through the inundated districts.

LONDON, July 3.—A Times special dispatch from Madrid says: Gen. Jovellar reports the defeat of the united bands of Dorregaray, Cuoula and Villa Lalne, between Visla Velle and Vieia Franca. The Carlists suffered heavy losses and fled in disorder toward Yglesula. The chief, Villalain, was killed. Gen. Campos reports a success in Catalonia. Gen. Loma has defeated Carlists who attacked Gacadello and Berberara.

Dispatches from Madrid confirm the reports of Gen. Jovellar's victories over the united Carlist bands of Dorregaray, Cucula and Villalain.

Gen. Martinez Campos, with the army of Catalonia, effected a junction with Jovellar yesterday, and the combined forces are now making preparations to attack Cantarieja.

Mrs. Frances Parke Butler.

We are called upon to chronicle the death of that distinguished lady, Mrs. Frances Parke Butler, wife of our esteemed friend, Col. E. G. W. Butler, of Dunboyne, parish of Iberville, but for the past four years a resident of Pass Christian, Miss.

The deceased, one of the most gifted and accomplished women of her time, was born at Mount Vernon, November 27, 1707, and was the daughter of Lawrence Lewis and Eleanor Parke Custis, of Woodlawn, Fairfax county, Va. Lawrence Lewis was the son of Fielding Lewis and Elizabeth Washington, only sister of Gen. Washington, and was one of the executors of his uncle's estate. Eleanor Parke Custis was the youngest daughter of John Parke Custis, only son of Mrs. Washington by her first husband, Daniel Parke Custis, and her mother was Eleanor Calvert, of Maryland, granddaughter of Lord Baltimore; and she, in common with her brother, George Washington Parke Custis, of Arlington, father of the late Mrs. Robert E. Lee, was adopted by the General and Mrs. Washington, at the death of their father, at the close of the Revolution. Her eldest son, Edward George Washington Butler, resigned his position as secretary of legation at Berlin, and fell at Belmont as major of the Eleventh Louisiana Regiment, requesting Gen. Polk to say to his father that he died like a Butler—in the discharge of his duty.

Her second son, Maj. Lawrence Lewis Butler, served, during the late civil war, on the staff of Lieut. Gen. Polk, and now resides in St. Louis, Mo., as a member of the house of Edward J. Gay & Co.

The eldest daughter, Isabel, married Col. George Williamson, of Louisiana, present United States minister in Central America, and died soon after the close of the late war; and her youngest daughter, Caroline Swanwick, married the late William B. Turnbull, of Louisiana, and has resided with her parents since the death of her husband.

Her younger sister, Angela, married the Hon. Charles Conrad, of Louisiana, and at her death left two sons, Charles A. Conrad, of New Orleans, and Lawrence Lewis Conrad, of Baltimore.

The deceased was the nearest living relative of the Father of his Country, and with Mrs. Com. Kennon and George Washington Peter, of Maryland, was the nearest living relative of Mrs. Washington.—Picayune, July 3.

YELLOW FEVER IN PENSACOLA BAY.—The Pensacola Gazette of the first instant thus refers to the reports concerning the prevalence of yellow fever in that city:

"Our exchange papers from various cities come to us by this morning's mail with Associated Press dispatches announcing the existence of yellow fever at Pensacola, and in the case of a New Orleans paper stating 'there was apprehension that the fever would reach the navy-yard or city.' The facts are as follows:

"Since our last issue the bark Von Moltke arrived at this port with several of her crew sick with yellow fever, and one of them died while the vessel was being taken to quarantine. She was anchored two and a half miles further up the sound than the remainder of the fleet, and rigorously isolated by every precaution that could be used. Since then two deaths have occurred aboard of her. She is about eight miles from the city, two bodies of water and a mile or so of land intervening, and a greater distance from the navy-yard. Practically this fever is as far from Pensacola as if it had remained in Havana, and no danger of its being communicated is apprehended."

HE WAS an Irishman, and took the obviously economical view of the subject. It was on the train from New York to New Haven. The conductor on reaching him said, with brevity and blandness: "Ticket?"

"Well, begorra," answered the Irish party, "I guess I've made a bit of a mishtake. I wanted to go to Easthampton, Mass., and I have bought a ticket for Easthampton, Conn."

"Why didn't you buy the right ticket?" said the conductor.

"Well, I saw the two of them, but the one to Easthampton, Conn., was the cheapest, and so I bought that one."

THEY have a good joke on a "professor of ventilation" down East, who, being put into a room at a hotel with another guest, asked the latter to raise a window at night, as the air was so close. "I can't raise it," said the guest, after working at the window for awhile. "Then knock a pane of glass out," said the professor, which was done. After awhile the professor got up and knocked out another pane; then he was able to sleep. But in the morning he discovered that he had only broken into a book-case.

WITH deep regret, and sympathy for the bereaved family, says the Western Methodist, we record the death of the wife of Rev. William M. McFerrin, of the Memphis Conference. Our beloved sister and friend was sorely afflicted for twelve months and more, but she was a resigned and patient Christian through all her protracted sufferings, which ended in death on the nineteenth of June, at the family residence, in Fayette county, Tenn.

From the Work.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have been requested to furnish you with a short notice of our District Conference, which met at Concordia, Bolivar county, Miss., on Friday, June 18, 1875. In the absence of a Bishop the chair was occupied by the Rev. James P. Dancer, presiding elder.

From the reports presented by the pastors it appears that the district is in a much better condition than it was a year ago. Several of the appointments have been blessed with gracious revivals of religion. The social meetings of the church are for the most part well attended. The class meeting, which had almost fallen into disuse, is being revived. Three new churches have been erected this year. Financially I suppose we stand as well as any district in the Conference.

The religious services of the session were interesting and profitable. The Conference sermon was preached by the Rev. B. F. Phillips. It was a clear exposition of and an earnest call to Christian duty.

Sunday was "the great day of the feast." In the morning the children of the Sabbath school met to hear an address. At eleven o'clock the Rev. John F. Truslow, a veteran soldier of the cross, preached to a large congregation. His theme was "the afflictions of the righteous."

In the afternoon the love-feast was held, conducted by the presiding elder. It was indeed a feast of love.

At night, by request of the Conference, the Rev. D. O. Hughes, pastor at Concordia, occupied the pulpit. The Lord was present in power, and several persons professed to find peace.

The following brethren were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: B. Jarnigan, I. Van Eaton, E. J. James and S. C. Blanchard. Alternates—R. J. Nugent and W. B. Smith.

Greenville was chosen as the place of meeting next year.

JOS. S. OAKLEY, Sec.

FARMERVILLE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Under a cloud of disaster do we attempt to drop you a few lines. On the night of the twenty-third instant we were aroused by an alarm of fire in Farmerville, at eleven o'clock at night, which soon consumed one-half of the business part of town. Loss over $40,000. We moved out, but the wind was in our favor. The fire consumed up to within one door of us. We took in and sheltered as many as we could of those who were turned out of doors.

Yesterday, the twenty-seventh instant, we preached at Shiloh, twelve miles west, in our elegant new church, which was an ornament to the town and country. It was worth $3,000, and the debt on it was all provided for; but the painful tidings has just reached us that it was consumed by fire last night, by the explosion of a lamp, while the congregation was present at prayer meeting. Sister Tabor, who was the principal contributor, has gone to heaven, and the few who are left had exhausted their present means. Our membership is houseless, and we feel discouraged. But by the help of the good Lord we will try to look up and do the best we can to get another house.

Our congregations are large and attentive. We have appointed three camp meetings for this year. We went beyond the bounds of the circuit, where there was no circuit, and appointed two of them. One of them is in what is known by the name of Dark Corner. The other, beyond Spearsville, is in what we call the "regions beyond." One-half of the preachers' tent will be in Arkansas and the other in Louisiana. Our rule for having camp meetings is: if we can find some one or two who will feed six preachers and their horses, we then announce the meeting, all to come provided with their own tents and provisions. Brethren, try it.

The fire consumes, but we will work and pray, hoping to get to heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal.

R. PARVIN.

Whitworth Female College.

MR. EDITOR: Being on the visiting committee appointed to visit Whitworth College, at Brookhaven, Miss., I attended the last examinations and commencement of that institution. Permit me to say a few words, through your columns, in behalf of this school.

Upon becoming acquainted with the young ladies there, one is struck with their apparent contentment. There is a rare and significant air of cheerfulness visible. A large number of college students generally leave before commencement day. But the students of Whitworth, with scarcely an exception, remained until after commencement, and the greater part until after the "sociable." This is a good indication, reflecting credit on the management. Dr. Garland once said to me that if students love their teacher, and confide in his capacity, you may safely say he is a good teacher. This is exemplified at Whitworth.

An item of more than pecuniary interest is the plainness with which the young ladies dress. Here the best of the land show their independence and their freedom from the slavish dominion of fashion, which is a shame to any woman. Even the graduating class appeared on the rostrum in plain calico dresses, with white aprons, and did so on principle. It was their own choice. The elegant simplicity of their appearance elicited the admiration of every appreciative spectator.

Another good feature is the absence of everything like self-praise and empty boasting—an absence sadly needed at most places of the sort. Here they appreciate the mission of a college. They regard the end and methods of education as too serious and too important for them to dispense with candor, sincerity and thoroughness in its pursuit. Hence they aim at substantial good, actual development. I saw nothing superficial. What is done is well done. Strict, rigid analysis is uniformly required through the session. This is the way they prepare pupils for severe written examinations. A large class competing for the medal in geometry demonstrated a proposition, selected by the committee, in the fourth book, then the propositions on which it depends, and so with these, thus tracing it back to definitions and axioms. They did this with surprising facility. Here the pretensions of the catalogue were fully realized. This is an example of the thoroughness of the instruction received in this department; and I am credibly informed it is true of all.

The president rules firmly and benignantly; hence he has excellent discipline. The past session has been a very prosperous one. More than two hundred students have attended, and have been orderly and studious. They are cared for by Mrs. Johnson with a mother's sympathy and interest, and all love her much.

The commencement exercises were very interesting. One could reasonably except to very little. The selections for the concert were well adapted to the end in view, viz.: the entertainment of the audience. It is objectionable to be overshot on such occasions, which is usually done. This concert was successful because it hit the mark. An artistic performance of real classic music is frequently lost on most of the audience. It was astonishing to see how well the pieces were performed. The delicate touch, the exact time—even when fifty hands were at work—the expression, etc., spoke well for teacher and pupils. Little children, whose feet were far off from the pedals, kept perfect time and played with creditable self-possession.

The graduating class had chaste, well-written compositions, and all read them impressively.

An address was delivered by Col. Anderson, of Lexington, Miss., which was a review of the progress of mind in subduing the world. Rev. John Mathews, of your city, made a new speech on an old subject. It was characteristic, unique and original. Long may it live in the memory of every hearer!

At the annual meeting of the alumni a well-written essay on amusements was read, which failed to accomplish its object, because its object cannot be accomplished even by wiser ones than the fair essayist. I am not histrionic critic enough to do justice to the recitation of the Prisoner of Chillon.

After a week's observation I cordially commend this college to the patronage of all, especially Methodists. It belongs to us, and for this reason we should patronize it. But it can stand on its merits. Our people are beginning to believe—what has long been a fact—that our own schools can furnish better educations than Romish schools can, and with much less danger to morals. It must be gratifying to every friend of education to know that we have here at home an institution which gives promise of such benefit to the daughters of the country. One great desideratum in female education has been a sufficient amount of severe mental discipline, such as mathematics affords, to give it strength and stability. Too much blandishment and love of applause, too much sacrifice of the substantial and enduring for the seeming and evanescent, have been the bane of female education. Rightly may we welcome the day whose light reveals a hope of better things. The world must now believe that woman may become real mistress of science. And who knows but it remains for Whitworth to graduate some Mary Somerville, who shall take her place in the galaxy of illustrious mathematicians? May I enjoy another commencement season there! Brookhaven cannot be too proud of having such a school in their midst. Esto perpetua!

This new and inviting field for Christian effort is already attracting considerable attention throughout the church. The Rev. J. J. Ransom, of the Tennessee Conference, a young man well adapted to the work, has offered himself for Brazil, and been accepted by the board.

The following letter from the Rev. J. T. Curry, of the Alabama Conference, will be read with interest, and we trust will be promptly responded to by the friends of missions.

I propose to be one of a hundred persons who will pledge ourselves for the required amount, by paying each $5 a year, for three years, payable on the first of August.

M. CASSAR'S METHOD OF TREATING THE BITE OF A RABID DOG.

The following has the recommendation of one of the most distinguished physicians of France, and is further supported by facts of a convincing character. We republish it from the Picayune of March 11, 1875:

"Take two tablespoonfuls of fresh chloride of lime, mix it with half a pint of water, and with this wash keep the wound constantly bathed and frequently renewed. The chlorine gas possesses the power of decomposing this tremendous poison, and renders mild and harmless that venom against whose resistless attack the artillery of medical science has been so long directed in vain. It is necessary to add that this wash should be applied as soon as possible after the infliction of the bite. The following are the results of this treatment: From 1810 to 1824 the number of persons admitted into Breslau Hospital was 184, of whom only two died; from 1783 to 1824 there were admitted into the hospital at Zurich 223 persons bitten by different animals (128 by dogs,) of whom only four died."

AMITE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I wonder if any of the preachers on the Summit district do not take the ADVOCATE? I requested them to inform me whether their delegates would attend the District Conference, and how they would come, but have only heard from one preacher. Please publish this, that they may know that I am anxious to hear, that necessary arrangements may be made for their accommodation. By so doing you will oblige yours, etc., D. P. BRADFORD.

Alabama Conference Female College Commencement.

TUSKEGEE, ALA.

The annual sermon was preached on last Sunday, in the college chapel, by the Rev. Mr. Loveless, of Auburn. A very large and remarkably intelligent congregation was in attendance, and the discourse was universally commended for its ability and instructiveness.

On Monday occurred the anniversary celebration of the Alumni Association, the principal feature of which was an address by A. A. Wiley, Esq., of Montgomery. "Home and its Refining Influences" was the theme announced by the orator, and was discussed in a style as elegant and admirable as its selection was judicious and apposite.

Monday night was the occasion of the art levee. After a brief but very interesting exhibition, consisting of recitations and music by some of the undergraduates of the institution, the audience were invited to inspect at their leisure the large collection of paintings and drawings, the products of the department, which were arranged with great taste and judgment along the walls of the beautiful chapel. Many of these specimens are productions of genuine merit, evincing that beauty of conception and delicacy of finish which ever characterize the handiwork of the true artist. The audience were well pleased with the exhibition, while warm encomiums were elicited even from the lips of the professed connoisseurs. Mrs. Moore, the wife of the president, who presides over this department, is assuredly a most accomplished and competent instructress.

The exercises on Tuesday consisted of the reading of compositions by the young ladies of the graduating class, seven in number, viz.: Misses Jennie Dowdell, V. Rogers, Jennie Jackson, Emma Hoffman and Viola Varner, of Tuskegee, and Misses Lila Smith, of Prattville, and Mollie Solomon, of Villula. Each acquitted herself in a manner highly creditable to her and satisfactory to her friends, and the lines of distinction, if there existed any, were so faint as to be scarcely appreciable.

The annual grand concert by the pupils in the department of music, on Tuesday night, furnished to a large and cultivated audience a most pleasurable entertainment. The concert proper was preceded by the performance of a beautiful operetta enacted by the pupils, and directed by their accomplished instructress, Miss Alice Adams, one of the loveliest of Tuskegee's lovely daughters.

Wednesday was the commencement day proper. First in the order of exercises was a well-written and handsomely rendered salutatory address by Miss Mollie Solomon, of the graduating class. A highly finished and deeply affecting valedictory was then delivered by Miss Lila Smith, whose pathetic tenderness of expression, purity of thought and gentle demeanor won the hearts and carried with her the sympathies of the entire audience. The valedictory was appropriately responded to, on the part of the graduates, by Miss Lula Doster, of Prattville. President Moore then came forward, and in a brief address, full of sober thought and wise admonition, released the graduates from his authority and announced to them the close of their school-girl days. The diplomas were neatly delivered by Miss Lucy Howard, and the alumni badges by Miss C. Menefee, both of Tuskegee.

The most interesting, as it was certainly the most notable, event of this commencement occasion was, however, yet to come. It had been arranged by the Alumni Association that an address of welcome to the graduates should be delivered by one of its members, and that duty was most happily devolved upon Miss Mattie Ligon, a beautiful and accomplished daughter of our distinguished fellow-townsman, Lieut. Gov. Ligon. And right admirably did she perform the part allotted her. At the conclusion of this ceremony the annual literary address was delivered by Prof. Walker, of Troy. Those who were so fortunate as to have been able to hear him characterize his effort as a very able and eloquent one.

Before the retirement of the audience Lieut. Gov. R. F. Ligon, chairman of the board of directors, announced that the exercises of the college would be resumed at the usual time in September. He also stated that President Mooro had tendered his resignation, but at the urgent solicitation of the board had consented to remain in charge until the close of the fall term; in the meantime arrangements would be made to secure the services of a successor, and no interregnum would occur. The reluctance of the directors to part with President Moore, and the unanimity and warmth with which he is commended by the committee of visitors on the part of the Conference, and by his patrons generally, furnish high testimonials to his ability and efficiency, and it is much to be regretted that he should have found it necessary to sever his relations with the college. In the meantime we earnestly trust that a generous public will bestow on him an encouraging and remunerative patronage.

TUSKEGEE, June 17, 1875.

THE following is the Central Pennsylvania Conference resolution on the presiding eldership. It passed by a vote of 115 for to 33 against.

Resolved, That we request the General Conference of 1876 to make the office of presiding elder elective.

THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1875.

KNEELING AT THE THRESHOLD.

I'm kneeling at the threshold, weary, faint and sore,
Waiting for the dawning, for the opening of the door;
Waiting till the Master shall bid me rise and come
To the glory of his presence, to the gladness of his home.

Bearing many a burden, struggling for my life;
But now the morn is breaking, the toil will soon be o'er;
I'm kneeling at the threshold, my hand is on the door.

Methinks I hear the voices of the blessed as they stand
Singing in the sunshine, in the far off sinless land.
O would that I were with them, amid their shining throng,
Mingling in their worship, joining in their song!

The friends who started with me have entered long ago,
One by one they left me struggling with the foe;
Their pilgrimage was shorter, their triumph sooner won;
How lovingly they'll hail me when all my toil is done!

With them the blessed angels, that know no grief nor sin,
I see them by the portals prepared to let me in.
But I'm wasted, worn and weary—O Father, bid me rest!

Jones Replies to John Smith.

DEAR JOHN: Your letter has been read with more than usual relish, and after a long silence I proceed to reply. I like a correspondent like yourself, to whom I can unbosom myself. This itinerant life would be a bitter pill, from a worldly point of view, had it no such sugar coatings. Some things you struck at in your letter are, to my mind, greatly in need of a wholesome ventilation. Somebody who "strains at gnats and swallows camels" thought you were laughing at me because I had received an education, and commiserating me because I was not married; but, John, they did not know what friends we are. In fact they "went off at half cock," for I have never graduated, and, better still, I have passed the bounds where I am "in demand," as you say. John, next time be sure and put one "t" in literatim, or we will send you back to where you graduated. As I never graduated, I can spell it as I please. As you dressed up the Advocates, let me tongue and groove some of the correspondents. For instance, Bro. Snub writes an article upon the subject of "Created or Acquired Holiness" for the edification of the whole world in general, and the rest of mankind in particular. In this wonderful production, which should set the question forever at rest, Bro. Squib sees a monstrous theory (!) which he characterizes as a dangerous doctrine (!) if not a damnable heresy (!) He spurs himself and does his own kicking as he tries to play logician, though really acting the part of the pedant. He uses such pugilisms as "I assert," "therefore," "conclusive" and "hence." Snub is demolished—not even two brickbats of him left together. But look out! In the next few numbers the way Snub comes back at him is enough to wake up everybody not otherwise engaged. Mr. Editor is the unfortunate screen behind which each combatant stands, and through which he shoots his arrows. Thus the spirit of controversy is aroused in the church, and from such small beginnings often comes forth one of those schisms which in its unfortunate effects lasts as long as church history has a page upon which to record the sad occurrence. Now what does it matter to me whether Adam was created holy, or whether he acquired it? It does me no good. All I know about it is all that is certain: that "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." I do think it is a burlesque for little backwoods Methodist preachers like you and I, or for city preachers (and very ordinary men too) like Drs. Suave and Finical, to be continually charging into print about something that is not worth five cents to the interests of Christ's kingdom, or to anything else.

John, from your earliest boyhood you have heard the expression: "The fields are whitening unto the harvest." Now I do not know whether the great Illustrator was pointing to a wheat or to a cotton-field, but one thing I do know: it is a blessed thing the spiritual year is longer than the temporal one, or the crop would rot in the fields, so slow has the process of harvesting become. I believe you are right, in the main, in your estimate of revivals. Bishop Pierce, the most eloquent of the eloquent, once said the same thing: "People nowadays get religion too easily." By their fruits ye shall know these revivals. Converts under the old regime performed specific duties after their season of penitence at the mourners' bench had given place to joy inexpressible. They sang, prayed, gave in their experiences, and spoke often one to another. Under the new regime they "come through" and "feel better," and that ends their experience, as a general thing.

Your allusions to preaching are highly appropriate. I'll tell you in a word what I think the matter is. We are endeavoring to preach sermons, instead of preaching the gospel. It is just the difference between the oration and the exhortation, between the sermon of Cicero and the gospel of Luther and Wesley. One is simply a chaste, faultless speech upon the main features or topics, "which lie hidden in the text like lustrous diamonds in the gloomy depths of the mine," while the other is a proclamation of glad tidings of great joy. I hope the day will come when topical preaching will be in the main defunct. I wish to see in vogue the style of preaching exemplified by Peter on the Pentecost, when he said: "Men and brethren, let me speak to you freely." Freely!—that is the style.

How are the times with you financially? They are pretty hard here indeed. I think this itinerant system is not well oiled in some of its joints (and it joints right on me,) and it is going to rub through somewhere. Not more than one in every ten of our preachers is half supported. When I meet the stewards and the Church Conferences they reply to my pressing needs in this wise: "Well, Bro. Jones, if this is a good crop year, and the people get out of debt, we can raise you some money toward fall." Live, horse, for the grass will grow in the spring.

You hope for a new work next year. Then you reflect that the financial soil there has been worked to its utmost extent, that there is only just so much in it, and that, one year with another, the minutes tell you its strength to a dot. It will be so, too, just so long as Christians give a stated amount—say one, five, ten, twenty or fifty dollars—a year quarterage, instead of giving liberally and systematically in small sums, as they can spare, and as God severally prospers them.

I have examined the tunes you cited me to, and I fully agree with you as to their excellence. We want singing in our congregations as bad as we want preaching in our pulpits. Let us lay aside the rostrum and the opera, and take up the pulpit and the song again, as in the days of yore. I expect the Savior excelled in the accomplishment of sacred song. "And when they had sung an hymn, they went unto the Mount of Olives." I wish we had that hymn and tune to sing just before a sacramental service, and that we might grasp the solemnity of the associations connected with it. I wish to recommend you some very fine tunes in our new tune-book: Boyiston, Nauvenia, Clay Street, Judkins, Regent Square, Portuguese, Forest, Cuthbert, Lebanon and Duke Street. If you wish something excellent from the Miscellany, get Sister Smith to try Bright Canaan, He Leadeth Me (solo) and "Over There" on the melodeon. Sweet Rest in Heaven is a beautiful piece also. For dismissal nothing is comparable to "Trisagion," in case you can have all the parts, which makes it sound like an angel song. Let us go to work and teach our congregations how to sing more than two or three hymns and tunes. Even J. R. Graves, the arch enemy of Methodism, admitted the power of its songs. He said the world would have been poorer had Charles Wesley not lived to sing: "Jesus, lover of my soul." He said that John planted Methodism, but that Charles sang it into life. A beautiful idea indeed. I must close. Give my regards to all your loved ones.

As ever, yours in Christ,

TOM JONES.

The Gospel of John.

The question is often asked: Why four gospels or biographies of Jesus, the Christ? Why would not one full history of "the things Jesus began both to do and teach" have been sufficient? Space and time at present forbid a formal answer. At some future time the peculiarities of the four gospels may be noticed, showing that in these several accounts of the life of Jesus there are no contradictions, but a harmonious unity in variety. I have only to notice the last of these writings, and shall try to be brief.

For the next six months four millions of Christian workers will be studying the Gospel of John. Every Sunday, from the first in July to the last in December, most of the Sunday schools in the United States, from Maine to California, will be studying the life and character of Jesus by John, the beloved disciple.

Matthew, it is supposed, wrote his gospel primarily for the Jews; Mark, under the direction of Peter, for the Romans; Luke for the Gentiles. John writes at a later period than either of the others, and is more of "the divine biography." A careful computation of the facts and incidents recorded by the evangelists shows that of one hundred parts there are in Mark ninety-three common to the other biographies, in Matthew fifty-eight, in Luke forty-one, but in John only eight. In these few facts—as his retirement into Galilee after John the Baptists' imprisonment, the feeding of the five thousand, and the last days of Jesus—how many, how important and interesting details are added by John. How grandly he begins: "In the beginning was the word!" In order to thoroughly understand a writer, we must first ascertain his design; hence the preface to nearly all works. John furnishes us with this in giving us the first fourteen verses of the first chapter: The "word was God. All things were made by him. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth." In the end we have the key to all this gospel in these words: "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing, ye might have life through his name."

This gospel has well been called the "heart of Christ," as being the history of him by the disciple whom he loved. The events and teachings peculiar to this gospel are the most precious heritage of the Christian. None of the other evangelists gives us such full and perfect views of the divinity of Christ, the necessity of the new birth, the love of God, the offices of Christ, the offices of the Holy Ghost as the promised Comforter, the privileges of believers, and the tender love of the risen Savior, as we find in John. The other evangelists begin with the child Jesus. John begins with the eternity of the Godhead—the "word was God." Matthew, Mark and Luke present more of the man Jesus, his labors about the Sea of Galilee and its cities being prominently presented. John clusters the acts of Gethsemane and Calvary. Is this Jesus, of whom Matthew, Mark and Luke wrote, the Christ, the Son of God? John's gospel is the complete and final answer. What would the world and the church do were it not for "the Well of Water," "the Bread that came down from heaven," "the Way, the Truth, the Life?"

Sunday school teachers and Christians, read, reread, study and memorize this last evangel—this most important link in the Savior's life. It is a tribute of love, from the disciple of love, to the Savior who bought him with his own precious blood. Let us take the lesson: If God so loved the world, if Christ so loved us, let us, as little children, love one another.

The Greenville Collegiate Institute.

MR. EDITOR: This institution of learning, under the auspices and control of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Greenville, Ala., is now one of the most prosperous and permanently established institutions in the Southern States. Being, as it is, under the supervision and entire control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it is with it a co-worker in the great cause of education and religious enlightenment. In this age of progression and awakening to the true interests of humanity, and intellectual culture, it behooves the church to take the work of education into its own hands, and esteem it a duty to forward its interests in every way in its power. The two are kindred in their natures, and go hand in hand. It has been noted that those institutions under the kindly care and influence of churches are in themselves more free from the immorality common to students than those not so surrounded.

Every church ought to esteem its school but a branch of itself and labors. We have an evidence of the success of this plan in this institution. Its commencement was indicative of the fact that the true purposes and ends of education are now coming properly before the public mind, and that the advanced theories of great educators will soon be accepted and acknowledged by the public mind as superior. The commencement exercises were inaugurated by Dr. Wadsworth, of Mobile, on the second Sunday in June. The day was fine and the house crowded. The sermon was one of this well-known divine's finest efforts. By its convincing power the congregation was moved heavenward. The address before the society of the college was delivered by Col. H. A. Herbert, of Montgomery, a man of known ability as a finished orator. His address was replete with gems of thought, and noble advice to the young men and women in this age of trial and endurance. The junior class was as fine as it has ever been my good pleasure to witness, as was likewise the senior, but not so large. The graduating exercises were at night, and represented to us the beauty of education in the development of the highest type of woman in mind, soul and heart. The results of education rest not alone in mere mental improvement, but in the development of the God-like powers and noble sentiments given to us by our Maker. The baccalaureate address was delivered by Dr. A. S. Andrews, of Montgomery, before a large audience. He placed woman in her true orbit, and enjoined her to occupy that high and exalted position entitled her by her nature, and acknowledged by the great and wise in all ages. The art address was delivered by Mac. A. Smith, Esq., of Prattville, Ala., evincing a thorough knowledge and appreciation of the beauties of form and color.

The school has been during the past year under the control of Maj. J. H. Dunkin, and his efficient management and liberality have placed the institution upon a firm basis, and entirely free from financial embarrassment. He has, without remuneration, borne the heavy burden of president, and with his own means paid the college out of debt; and long will his bounteous liberality be remembered by the people of Greenville. Having resigned his position as president, the board of trustees have elected Prof. T. W. Dyer, of New Orleans, an educator of known ability and deserved reputation, under whose management we can but predict a bright and prosperous future for the college.

REV. WILLIAM C. ROBINSON.

MR. EDITOR: Death has been busy with the old men of the Alabama Conference this year, and our large list is being rapidly diminished. The fifth one has fallen since Conference. Rev. William C. Robinson died in Texas, April 16, having lived more than threescore and ten years.

The statistics of his life which have been furnished me are somewhat confused, and may perhaps be a little inaccurate. From these it appears he was born in Washington county, Ga., November 2, 1802. On the twenty-ninth of August, 1820, he was converted, and on the tenth of the following September joined the Methodist Church. During the year 1821 or 1822 he married Henrietta A. Maddox. In a year or two after his conversion he was appointed class-leader and exhorter. Having settled in Putnam county, Ga., he was licensed to preach in 1826. In 1835 he was ordained deacon, and elder in 1839.

It appears, from the information I have, that as a local preacher he was very laborious and useful, having regular appointments every Sabbath. In 1836 he settled in the eastern part of Alabama. At that time that section was mostly a wilderness, as the Indians had just been removed to the West. As it was a most beautiful and inviting country, situated between Georgia and what was called old Alabama, it was settled up with unusual rapidity. Bro. Robinson being among the first on the ground, was impressed that he ought to exert all his strength to meet the coming tide, and mold the heterogeneous elements into a beautiful and symmetrical Christian community. Hence, though verging toward the meridian of life, and with an expensive family, mostly daughters, on his hands, he determined to give himself entirely to the work of the ministry. The Alabama Conference needed laborers, for it had not then attained to anything like the vast proportions of after years. The door was open, and, though temporal interests pulled strongly in a contrary direction, he did not hesitate, but gave himself fully to the itinerant work. His first appointment in the Conference was for the year 1838. I have not the Minutes at hand, but suppose he joined during the winter of 1837-38. His first work was the Lafayette circuit, which he filled two consecutive years. It was then, during my early boyhood, that I first knew him; and well do I remember the esteem in which he was generally held.

Quiet, easy and dignified in his bearing, devoted in his ministry, consistent in life, and managing the affairs of the church with excellent judgment, he contributed no little toward establishing the enlightened moral and religious tone which has ever since characterized the people of that part of the State. He had the hearty support and co-operation of many wealthy and influential personal friends and relatives, which doubtless promoted his efficiency.

His preaching was not ornate, but eminently judicious and practical, and sometimes very unctuous, causing the people to desire and pray for more of the Spirit's influence. It is likely that later in life his efforts in the pulpit were not equal to those of his first years in the Conference. In 1840 he was on Tuskegee circuit, and during 1841 and 1842 was on the Glennville circuit. For five years following he served negro missions, at that time no mean part of the itinerant work in Alabama.

Having lost his wife, he married a lady in Texas, which caused his location and removal to that State. Some years afterward she died, and he, having returned to Alabama, reentered his old Conference at the session held at Macon, Miss., December, 1858, and from that time till December, 1872, was effective, filling acceptably many circuits and missions, among them Elba, Geneva, Clayton, Campbellton and Mount Ida. At the Conference held in Eufaula, December, 1872, he was superannuated. It will be observed he was in the itinerant work about a quarter of a century, and served the church as a local preacher nearly as long.

He had his trials, and some that were peculiarly heavy, but the spirit of meekness and trust with which he entered into the itinerant work never forsook him. He came out of the flames without the smell of fire upon his garments, so far as the purity of his life and his good name were concerned. He was a sincere, uncomplaining Christian gentleman and minister. His daughter writes me: "I have no recollection of ever having heard father murmur at his lot, though sometimes it seemed hard."

We are not astonished to learn that his end was more than peaceful—it was a grand triumph. At the prospect of release from protracted and painful sufferings, and in full view of his crown, his feelings found expression in loud shouts of exultation and praise.

After he was superannuated he went to live with his son-in-law, Nelson Waters, in Cass county, Texas, at whose house he died. Rev. J. J. Davis, of the North Texas Conference, knew him intimately, and was with him frequently during his seventeen weeks' illness of dropsy of the heart. He writes me that no murmur escaped the lips of the dying saint, though at times he prayed for an early release from his excruciating sufferings, if God so willed. A short time before he died he said to Bro. Davis: "I have to-day been trying to retrospect my past life closely, as I know I cannot live long, and to test my feelings in regard to my past conduct. I am conscious of no intentional wrong, but of a purpose, all through life, of trying to do the best I could, and I feel I have lived up to that purpose. I have nothing to regret. I have a conscience void of offense toward God and man."

How few, in a retrospect of the past, in the immediate presence of death, can find nothing to regret!

He also "testified to the sweet comforts of religion," and to the fact that it could sustain one even under varied and severe trials. He greatly desired to meet his old comrades of the Alabama Conference once more, and said: "Say to them: 'All is well; you are very near my heart.'" He closed his own eyes, and with a shout of praise and triumph passed over the river. Hamilton, Scaife, Perdue and LeVert had preceded since Conference. Who will be the first to follow? "Help, Lord, the godly man ceaseth."

MRS. MARY LOUISA LIGON, daughter of Dr. William G. and Martha E. Austin, was born in Woodville, Miss., July 23, 1846, and died at the residence of her parents, in New Orleans, June 8, 1875. In December, 1867, she was married to Mr. George V. Ligon. Her husband and an infant son survive her.

Sister Ligon was religious from her earliest childhood. In her tenth year she obtained assurance of sins forgiven, and was received into the church. She joined the Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, of New Orleans, in 1855, and was for years under my pastoral care. I have rarely known a more consistent and conscientious Christian, or one that seemed to realize more deeply the import of the vows assumed in the public profession of faith. She was blameless and harmless—a child of God without rebuke. She exhibited wonderful strength and firmness in adhering to her religious convictions, and in the performance of duty. After her death were found among her papers notes and memoranda detailing her innermost thoughts and feelings, and showing that she habitually walked with God. Dead to the world, her life was hid with Christ in God. She evidently enjoyed intimate communion with God, and toward the close of life especially her experience was one of remarkable clearness and power.

At the Seashore camp meeting, last summer, she was greatly comforted and blessed, and during its progress said to her mother: "I am often led to thank God, from the depths of my soul, for trials and crosses. They have been sent in mercy to reveal the light of God's countenance to me. My motto is: 'Nearer, my God, to thee.'"

Her last illness, of a few days' duration, was attended with great suffering, but her mind was clear, and the closing hours painless and tranquil. Fully conscious of her condition and of the near approach of the end, she named her child at its baptism by her bedside, talked composedly of her departure, requested the family ministering about her to make no violent demonstrations of sorrow when the end should come, and joined with them in singing: "Rock of Ages."

God was peculiarly gracious to his suffering child in the strong support given, and in permitting her to render a testimony so sublime and beautiful. She met death not as its cowering and reluctant victim, but as a conqueror treading upon a vanquished foe, and ready to be crowned. All the promises in their fulfillment seemed to gather in rich and glowing clusters about that dying scene. "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A MOTHER IN ISRAEL HAS GONE.

MRS. NANCY ENLOW, the consort of the Rev. Hiram Enlow, departed this life on the twenty-fourth of May, A. D. 1875. She was born at Dead Man's Bend, near the Mississippi river, in Wilkinson county, Miss., March 9, 1814; was married to Hiram Enlow August 1, 1830, and joined the M. E. Church in December, 1832. Her physician pronounced her disease typhoid fever. Her affliction was short but severe. She was the mother of thirteen children—four sons and nine daughters—all of whom she lived to see married save her youngest son, and all members of the church of her choice. Sister Enlow, from her conversion to her death, was a Methodist of the old stamp. She lived in spiritual enjoyment and communion with Christ. I have known her for nearly twenty years, and in all the relations of life I do not think I have ever known her superior, and especially in her attachment and care for the orphan. She was philanthropic indeed and in truth. This was shown in her kind and constant attention to them. As a wife she was everything to her husband that the Bible required. As a mother she was mild and loving, and at times a little indulgent, but firm, requiring of her children obedience to her advice. She early led her children to the temple of God, and by precept and example taught them that to serve God was the first and greatest duty of man. The result of her pious example has been the means of bringing all her children to God, and all of them are members of Christ's church. She was a model mother. She feared God and walked in the way of his commands blameless. Nothing was ever permitted to rise above her duty to God and her church. This was exemplified in her constant attendance upon the means of grace, for even while she had a large family and many domestic duties to discharge her seat for many years was never vacant when it was possible for her to be present. She was prompt at church, class and prayer meetings. I was her pastor for five years. Having been intimate with her as a friend and a Christian for nearly twenty years, I will say I have never known any superiors, and but few equals, in all the relations of Christian life and duty. In conclusion, she died as she lived.

THACKERAY ON DANCING PARTIES.—The system of evening parties is a false and absurd one. Ladies may frequent them professionally with an eye to a husband, but a man is a fool who takes a wife out of such assemblies, having no other means of judging of the object of his choice. You are not the same person in your white crape and satin slip you are in your morning dress. A man is not the same in his tight coat and feverish glazed pumps, and stiff white waistcoat, as he is in his green, double-breasted frock, his old black ditto, or his woolen jacket. And a man is doubly a fool who is in the habit of frequenting evening parties, unless he is forced thither in search of a lady to whom he is attached, or unless he is compelled to go by his wife. A man who loves dancing may be set down to be a fool; and the fashion is greatly going out with the increasing good sense of the age. Do not say that he who lives at home, or frequents clubs in lieu of balls, is a brute, and has not a proper respect for the female sex; on the contrary, he may respect it most sincerely. He feels that a woman appears to most advantage not among those whom she cannot care about, but among those whom she loves. He thinks her beautiful when she is at home making tea for her old father. He believes her to be charming when she is singing a simple song at her piano, but not when she is screeching at an evening party. He thinks by far the most valuable part of her is her heart; and a kind, simple heart, my dear, shines in conversation better than the best of wit. He admires her best in her intercourse with her family and her friends, and detests the miserable, twaddling, slipslop that he is obliged to hear from and utter to her in the course of a ball, and avoids and despises such meetings.

To invest the pursuit of truth with the sanctity of a religious duty is the true reconciliation of religion and science.—Stanley.

EVENING ON THE COAST.

BY CONSTANCE GRAY.

A sweet, calm, restful moment free from care,
Filled for silent prayer;
A murmur low and gentle from the sea,
A monotone chanted unceasingly,
By things that worship there.

Faint is the evening starlight on the shore,
And by my cottage door
The west winds 'midst wistaria blossoms play,
And weeping branches of the willow sway
Pensive, for daylight's pier.

My cottage by the sea a shelter seems
From winds and waves; and dreams
Like sprite of the sea-shell on the beach,
Or clinging sea-weed flung ashore, still teach
My memory's restless streams.

Distant yet darkly seen the hills arise,
Veiled by the misty skies;
The boundaries of this narrow world are they,
Until, soul-freed, we spread our sails away
With limitless emprise.

A burst of glory from the full round moon
Comes like an added boon
To mortals, pouring down the streaked wave
A track of living light, bright beams that pave
The depths, then fade too soon.

A ship with moonlit sails that waits to seize
The loped-for, favoring breeze:
Beautiful on the deep, like some fleet bird
That, weary, droops her wing, but half unfurled—
Such are life's restless!

Thus many travelers, homeward bound, still wait,
Storm-tossed by adverse fate,
Patiently hoping to regain some day
The haven safe, where billows cannot play,
And calm come, sweet though late.

And for that better shore, not circled by these bars,
Where life's rude shocks and jars
Are all unfelt, we look out for the tide
To drift us surely, voyaging to the untried
Safe port beyond the stars.

Yam Feast of New Caledonia.

Among the various days set apart by the New Caledonians for special solemnities, the feast of the gathering of yams is one of the most important. It takes place, according to M. Vieillard's account, of which this notice is an abstract, at different but predetermined periods in different tribes, and is attended by persons from fifteen to twenty miles round. For some days previous a smaller fete is celebrated by the women themselves, and on this occasion they are allowed to take a certain number of yams from the field, and to indulge in dancing, of which they are passionately fond.

Some time before the day appointed the chief of the principal tribes sends invitations to those of the smaller neighboring tribes with whom he is on friendly terms. Each village is obliged to supply a contingent of yams and other provisions proportionate to its rank and importance; and from this obligation the chief himself is not exempt. On the day of the feast the inhabitants of the villages, headed by the chiefs, make their way to the place appointed, the women bearing the provisions. The chief, surrounded by the elders of the tribes, then makes his way to the sacred tree, where are then brought to him yams, sugar-canes, and taro (the tubers of Caladium esculentum,) as well as the results of the fishing expedition which always takes place the evening before the feast. A fire being lighted, the fruits are cooked, and a portion of them is placed by the chief in an appointed place, with a solemn invocation to "the spirit," requesting his protection, and a plentiful supply of yams and fish.

The inhabitants of the different villages being assembled, the examination of the provisions is proceeded with. To this end one of the inferior chiefs, assisted by one of the elders of the tribe, takes his seat upon an eminence from which he can survey the whole assembly, and gives the order for the untying of the packages. Those of the principal chief are first opened. A native takes a yam and presents it to the presiding chief, who, after stating that it is from the great chief, holds it up so that all may see it, and says in a monotonous voice, "One?" to which the assistant elder answers in the same tone: "Yes." The yam being placed on the ground, the same native takes another, and the same formalities are gone through, and so on until ten have been offered, when the ceremony is recommenced.

This monotonous performance continues for a considerable time, as all the provisions have to be inspected in a similar manner. At its conclusion the yams are arranged in an octagonal column six or seven yards high, the base of which is formed of sugar-canes and cocoanuts; the whole is supported by long poles bound together with the tough, pliant stems of climbing plants.

In many tribes the arrangement is different, and as many lots of yams, taro, sugar-canes, cocoanuts, etc., are made as there are chiefs present. If strange chiefs are in attendance their part is the first selected, and is the finest; then comes that of the principal chief, then that of the second, and so on, ending with those of the chiefs of each village. These lots arranged, the principal chief makes a speech and then distributes them. Each petty chief then proceeds to a second distribution among his subjects, reserving a good share for himself; a lot is preserved for the women, but, contrary to our notions of politeness, it is always the poorest and most meager. The heads of families then distribute their shares among those under them, and, the business of the day being thus concluded, the assembled company devote themselves to dancing and other amusements.—London Gardeners' Chronicle.

The Bible in Madagascar.

At the recent anniversary of the British Foreign Bible Society the Rev. Dr. Mullens made an address in which he gave a touching account of the earnest spirit and devotion of the Christians of Madagascar. After relating an incident which showed unusual anxiety and exercise of self-denial to get Bibles, he said:

"You know the story of the burning of the idols in 1869. You have heard of the great revival that the Spirit of God had given to the religious life of the Malagasy people—to the Christian people and to those who were outside the church. Well, that is a real revival. There is a real spirit of inquiry; there is a real searching after God, not merely in the minds of a few, but in the minds of multitudes of the Malagasy people; and we cannot forget that if with all your heart ye seek him ye shall surely find him. And God has honored their faith and honored their efforts; and Christianity is growing among them every hour. I had the pleasure of paying two visits to parts of the country scarcely known to English missionaries. We were proposing to place missionaries in those retired corners because they have had so little instruction. One of them is a province scarcely known to Englishmen, and not known to geographers at all. We found in the province thirty-one churches, and we found excellent Christian teachers and pastors among the officers. The pastor of the principal church in the province, and who was a native of the province, had, while a boy, been in the government office, but he had been forbidden, under the rule of the former Queen, to read or to learn, and he had been unable to get any school education; but, like some of the children in this country, he taught himself. He read the subscription of the government letters, knowing what was written on them, and he compared word with word, and one letter with another, and so he got to know that a certain sign meant this and another sign meant that; and so he learned, at first by words, and not by individual letters, and so in a great measure he taught himself to read. Having learned so much, the rest was very easy, and he set himself to work to study carefully. He made himself master of the laws and customs and regulations of the province, and the consequence was that a man so willing and so able could not be lost sight of. The government officers made him one of the local magistrates and judges, but the Christian people said: 'But he is the best man we have in the province; he must be our pastor too.' And so there he is, a local preacher, a layman, set apart as the pastor of the church, and one of the judges of those petty matters which are brought before the civil authorities. In this way these Malagasy Christians try to turn everybody to account. They want the best man that can teach them, and they sit at his feet as the most willing scholars.

"A thing happened just before I was in Madagascar that we cannot but think of with great pleasure. Four soldiers came up to the capital after a long journey. They were found by the superintendent of our press, Mr. Parrett, and they said that they had come right away from a province in the southeast of the island. They said: 'Some years ago some of our officers came down from the capital, and they brought a New Testament with them, and we have service, and keep chapel, and read the Bible, but we have only two Bibles among us, and a few pages of the New Testament, and we have heard a distant rumor that at Antananarivo there are riches of knowledge without end. We hear that there are here abundance of books, and people who understand them, and people from whom we can learn new hymns and new tunes.' 'Well,' Mr. Parrett said, 'you have come to the right place. We can do everything for you.' Bibles, hymn-books, Testaments, and soon, were placed in their hands, and they were sent back to their corner of the country happy and rejoicing. That was purely native effort. No Englishman had ever been there. The Malagasy had believed, and therefore they had spoken, and the gospel had been spread. I have no doubt that something of that kind may be found among every branch and class of the civilized tribes of the island."

Reaching the Poor.

The question is how to reach the masses. There are two ways very simple, and yet very sure. First, go to them on their own ground; second, invite them to meet you on your ground. That has been tried in Leeds. I am sorry there is no time to tell you of its success; but let me show you how it has been done. At least a hundred employers of labor have been solicited to have a mission service on the works, and I think, with about three exceptions, they have said willingly: "Come and speak to our men. We will give them the time—we will give them half an hour;" and in many of the works it has cost the masters from £50 to £100. These services have been wonderfully successful. A man the other day said to me: "Do not mind if you are a little insulted, because two-thirds of my hands are Roman Catholics;" but I am glad to say I never had a more patient and attentive congregation than that lot of working people listening for half an hour to the simple story of the cross of Christ. Last Saturday night, at the invitation of the proprietor of the Victoria Race Ground, I went to speak to the race people. He said: "I will keep them if you come at six o'clock, when the sports are over;" and on the race cards—a thing I never saw until last Saturday—was this extraordinary notice: "No heats run after six o'clock, in consequence of the mission service." (Laughter and applause.) These men were most attentive, and as the result a number of sporting men have come to the Lord Jesus. We have gone to them on their ground; we have given them an invitation not to any one particular place of worship, but to the place nearest their own homes, and the consequence is a number of them have come. Just go to them on their own ground, and then invite them to yours. Would it be too hard to ask our ministers to say to their congregations on Sunday morning: "My dear friends, will you meet me at half-past five in the deacons' vestry?" Let the minister and his wife go, and the deacons and their wives, and you will see if there are not a hundred people gathered together. Then, after a quarter of an hour's praying for a blessing, let them go forth to the back slums, and say to the poor people: "Come with us and we will do you good." Why, we have had scores at my place of worship, if not hundreds, who have just been invited, every Sunday night since last January, and they have come—some that had not entered a place of worship for fifteen years; and in the after-meeting it is good to see such men as these kneeling down and saying: "What must I do to be saved?" It will well repay you, my dear friends—it will fill the empty chapels; and if you will give them a hearty welcome you will find a host of these workingmen thoroughly accessible. They are waiting to be asked, and they will respond immediately to your invitation.

A "COLLECTION" INCIDENT.—Dr. Punshon, in a speech made in London a few days ago, just before the collection was called for, told this incident: About a month previous, as Mr. Spurgeon was sitting down in his orphanage, one of the little waifs and strays came up and said: "Mister Spurgeon, please may I speak to you?" "To be sure, Bob, you may." "Please may I come between you and that ere gentleman there?" "Yes, Bob." So he came forward and said: "Now, Mister Spurgeon, supposin' there was an orphanage with a great many boys in, and holiday-time came, and the mothers and aunts and sisters came and brought the boys a lot of money and good things." "Well," said Mr. Spurgeon, "I dare say, Bob, that would be a good thing." "Suppose one little boy hadn't got no mother, and no aunt, and no sister to bring him anything, don't you think somebody ought to give that little boy sixpence?" Well, said Mr. Spurgeon, there was a plain, straightforward logic in that appeal which he felt it impossible to resist, and he was obliged to confess that it would be a desirable thing that somebody should, under those circumstances of disadvantage, give the boy sixpence. "Well, then," said the child, "'cause that's me." Well, he (Dr. Punshon) wanted to make the application. When he asked them to give a good collection to that fund they must not think he was speaking to some one else, but each one take it to himself.—New York Christian Advocate.

DR. HARRIS, author of "The Great Teacher," "The Great Commission," and other most excellent works, is both an example and an illustration of the truth that each man must judge for himself how to use best in the pulpit his own special talent. The English Independent quotes from a recent biography a paragraph upon Dr. Harris, from which we take this:

"No one could listen to Dr. Harris for five minutes without being impressed with the fact that he was a first-rate man. His sermons realized to the full the expectations which his books had created. Though he read his discourse, it was no great drawback to the lovers of extemporaneous speaking. Compared with his reading, his free speech was considered impotency itself. The latter was not his sphere. He had nothing to do with the platform; the pulpit was his throne, and there as a reader. In reading, his hearers listened, admired and profited. All was easy, natural and agreeable, while the mind was carried away with the delicacy of his person, the unartificial character of his action and his attitude, the elegance of his style, the calmness of his spirit and the quiet splendor of his conceptions. There was something celestial in the man, the manner and the matter."

THE Congregationalist has the following in relation to the work of an American evangelist in Berlin:

"Mr. Pearsall Smith, of whose wonderful work in Berlin we have given a brief narrative in another column, is a member of a glass manufacturing firm in Philadelphia. At the close of one of his conferences in Berlin Dr. Hegel, the son of the great philosopher, and president of the Consistory of Brandenburg, addressed him in these words: 'Sir, I rise, not in my official but in my personal capacity, to thank you in the warmest and sincerest manner for the words addressed to us last night, and again this morning. In doing so I am sure I echo the feelings of hundreds who have heard you. No one can feel and know so clearly and vividly as I what the anxieties and difficulties of God's church in this province and in the whole country are. At the present moment our hands and hearts have been discouraged. But you point us to the imperishable source of our strength, the life of God within, and we have been strengthened and cheered. We bid you welcome and thank you.' Considering that this evangelist speaks no other than the English language, and that his words have to be interpreted, his success is one of the extraordinary facts of modern times."

BISHOP MCQUADE insists that the overthrow of the common school, as it now exists in this country, is the question in American politics. And "Catholics," he says, "must avoid side issues. The Spanish Inquisition punished with torture; the Bismarck inquisition punishes by throwing men into dungeons; the American Inquisition punishes by taxation." Irish, German and American Catholics, he threatens, will not be so patient as their fathers have been. The platform of the schools is not new for them. It is for Jews, for infidels, for Protestants; "but we are under it. Suppose we get strong enough to rise up. Remember the platform is on us; where will the platform be then? Men will learn that we have something more to do than praying; we must vote, and the laymen must work. There is a jealousy of the priests which will not have force against the earnest, persistent labor of the laymen."

GRACE is glory militant, and glory is grace triumphant. Grace is glory begun, and glory is grace made perfect. Grace is the first degree of glory—glory is the highest degree of grace.

—Most of the Greeks who had attended the Protestant services at Damascus, on account of their financial difficulties with their patriarch, have gone back again. They reported "that the Protestants had nothing to give them but the gospel." Some have, however, remained.

—Dr. R. S. Storrs, of Brooklyn, recently preached the sermon at the rededication of the Congregational church at Longmeadow, Mass. It is a singular fact that just a hundred years ago Dr. Storrs' grandfather preached the sermon at the foundation of the same church.

—The Rev. Henry Morgan, of Boston, has engaged a corps of twenty young men to go round aiding the poor with prayer, comfort and occasional donations. They report at three o'clock in the afternoon, receive $50 a month among themselves, and distribute a like sum among the poor.

—At the first annual meeting of the Scottish Disestablishment Association, just held in Edinburg, it was stated that a new constitution had been adopted with a view of enabling Free Churchmen and Liberationists to co-operate in a movement for the disestablishment of the Scotch Church.

—The Old Catholic movement has definitely passed the formative period. The reform now counts 200,000 communicants, representing 200 parishes, and for these there are as yet only 60 to 80 priests. This shows that the people, as in the days of Luther, are more ready for reform than the clergy.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church is steadily growing in Newark, N. J., and now numbers about one hundred and fifty. In Wheeling, W. Va., a movement is being made for the formation of a new congregation. The work of this denomination is growing in strength and power. A new church has been organized in Chicago.

Our Young People.

A CHILDREN'S HYMN.

From the sunny morning
To the starry night,
Every look and motion
Meets our Father's sight.

From our earliest breathing
Till our latest year,
Every sound we utter
Meets our Father's ear.

Through our earthly journey,
Wherever'er we go,
Every thought and feeling
Does our Father know.

Let us, then, be careful
That our looks shall be Brave and kind and cheerful
For our Lord to see.

Let us guard each accent
With a holy fear,
Fit our every saying
For our Lord to hear.

Let no thought within us,
Hidden or confessed,
Ever bring a sorrow
To our dear Lord's breast.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 11.

CONCERNING BEES.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: We seem to be getting at last quite close to the story which we started so long ago to tell—"How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." We have had Tom's account of bees, and Harry's also, and now if nothing turns up to prevent I think we can get at it pretty soon, and satisfy the curiosity of all the little folks, and the "Reader of the ADVOCATE" who thinks we "scatter" too much. But as Tom's and Harry's account are both somewhat imperfect, I think I must first post you a little upon the habits of bees.

You have all seen my bees in the glass hives, or rather the hives with glass fronts, and have noticed how closely I watch them. I have found the study of these little insects a matter of great interest, and a very pleasant pastime for my leisure hours. I have learned much of their habits from my own observation, but, in common with most people, am indebted for nearly all that I know of them to the industrious labors of a blind man who lived a long time ago. I must tell you about him. His name was

FRANCOIS HUBER.

Somewhat more than a century ago, had you been living in Geneva, Switzerland, you might have been acquainted with a bright-eyed boy of this name. I don't know that you would have noticed anything particularly remarkable about him except his fondness for study, and particularly for the study of the natural sciences. In this respect he somewhat resembled our Tom, for he commenced very early in life making collections of beetles, bugs and butterflies, and watching the habits of spiders and small creatures generally, and reading books on natural history, which, by the way, were not nearly so numerous in his day as now. In particular he had devoted much attention to the study of the habits of the honey-bee, and had read the works on this subject which were recognized as authority at that time, and were written mainly by two very learned men named Reaumur and Bouuet. He would first read these books and then go and watch his bees, and see if his own observation confirmed the statements made in the books. You see he was one of those boys who liked to prove everything. Well, some of the statements which he found in the books he could not verify, and after close and repeated examination he came to the conclusion, when not more than twelve or fourteen years old, that the books were wrong. Francois was, you will see, a very precocious lad, for he not only dared to differ with the books, but he actually ventured a much more hazardous experiment—that of falling in love with a young lady, a Miss Lullin, who reciprocated his affection, and the young couple became engaged before he was fifteen years of age. Let me see—this was in 1764, I think, for Huber was born in 1750, and became blind when fifteen years of age. His parents were wealthy, and as he was a young man of promise and good family the parents of Miss Lullin were not at all opposed to the match, though they must have thought it a very early age for them to get married. But about this time his health began to fail and his eyesight to grow dim, some say from too close attention to his studies. At first but little was thought of it, but after awhile his friends getting anxious, he was taken to Paris and placed under the treatment of the most celebrated physicians of that city, and I might as well say of the whole world, for Paris was then, even more than now, the center of art and science, and the place to which the learned in all the professions congregated. But their treatment had no other effect than to restore his general health, unless, indeed, as has frequently happened, it was the cause of his entire loss of sight, for his eyes gradually grew worse, and at the age of eighteen he became totally blind. When he returned home the parents of Miss Lullin became violently opposed to the match, as they did not wish their daughter to marry a blind man; but their affection for each other had been strengthened by his affliction, and, despite the objections of her parents, they were married. You see my story is somewhat romantic.

"But what can a blind man do?"

This was the question, I imagine, which Huber asked himself when he had had time fairly to grasp his situation. His was a brave heart, and he determined to win an honorable distinction, and be of real service to the world of science, in spite of his blindness. Fortunately for him he was not under the necessity of struggling for a mere subsistence, for his father at his death had left him in easy circumstances so far as mere money matters were concerned. His selection of a life-work was eminently characteristic of the man. Most would have chosen a calling in which the use of the organs of sight would be least demanded. He chose one which had hitherto baffled the scrutiny of the keenest observers. He determined to devote his life to the investigation of the habits of the honey-bee. Before this he had carefully read all that had been written on the subject, and some of these writings were very old. Do any of you children remember any mention of honey or bees in the Old Testament?

"Yes, I do, grandpa," says Harry; "I remember Samson's riddle."

"And I," says Tom, "remember that it says somewhere in the Bible: 'Butter and honey shalt thou eat.'"

Yes, and you may remember also that on the return of the spies to the camp of the Israelites they reported that Canaan was "a land flowing with milk and honey." So you see it would be quite impossible to go back to a time in the history of men at which they did not have honey. John the Baptist, you know, lived on locusts and wild honey; but I am almost afraid to speak of this lest Tom should want to tell you what he knows about locusts, and keep us from our story about the "bays' nest." Our Savior also, we are told, even after he had risen from the dead, ate a piece of broiled fish and a honeycomb. You must have read, Tom, in the fourth book of the Georgics, the summary by Virgil of what the ancients claimed to know about bees, though I must say that their knowledge was very imperfect. The greatest philosopher of Greece (Aristotle) thought that bees sprang from the leaves of trees, and some very learned men thought they would only come into existence from the body of a young ox killed with violence, while others held that bees that came from the carcass of a lion, like those of Samson, were braver than any others. It would seem that they should have known better, for Pliny says that Aristomachus and Philiscus devoted nearly all their lives to the study of these insects, living in the forests for this purpose alone.

But just before Huber's time, in 1712, one Maraldi, a mathematician of Nice, had invented the glass hive, by means of which the bees could be much better observed than when in stumps and hollow trees, and he and the others, whose names I have given you, had written down the observations which Huber had found so full of errors. Huber had some of these hives made, and how and what he saw I must tell you next time, for it is so late now I must really say: Good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From a Young Friend.

JUNE 26, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. I go to school and learn very fast. Mr. Editor, please tell Grandpa Goodale to finish telling us about "milking the bays' nest," and then he can go on telling about the rest of the stories; and tell Tom to please not to put such long words in his stories, for I can't half make them out. I love to read the ADVOCATE, for there are so many pleasing little pieces in it. Good-by.

Your friend,

ALECK P. STEWART.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE LIKE?—It is like a large, beautiful tree, which bears sweet fruit for those that are hungry, and affords shelter and shade for pilgrims on their way to the kingdom of heaven.

It is like a cabinet of jewels and precious stones, which are not only to be looked at and admired, but used and worn.

It is like a telescope, which brings distant objects and far-off things of the world very near, so that we can see something of their beauty and importance.

It is like a treasure-house—a storehouse of all sorts of valuable and useful things, and which are to be had without money and without price.

It is like a deep, broad, calm, flowing river, the banks of which are green and flowery, where birds sing and lambs play, and dear little children are loving and happy.—The Well-Spring.

WE throw our influence into the world—good, bad or indifferent—and then step out and are forgotten.

Prayer in the Family.

The first church was a family church, the first priesthood and ministry were over a household, and the first social prayer was doubtless in the home circle. It is not needful to be argued out, or set forth in the form of scriptural proof, that there should be prayer in the house. Our Methodist rules assume that it is one of several other duties which the Spirit writes on truly awakened hearts." Such persons may neglect it, they may decline the performance from lack of courage, or from fancied incapacity, but they cannot be clear in their consciences.

It is good for the whole family—wife, children, guests and servants—to worship God in this way. Even the cats and dogs, and other domestic animals, come to recognize the usage, and seem the better for it, though they may not understand the import as fully as their masters. Servants may avoid participation, but they feel the influence, and are conscious that God is under the roof as well as above it. Careless and ungodly neighbors come to know it, and in spite of themselves look upon that house as different from theirs, and better. It is a testimony to the world without, witnessing for the truth, and preaching in a humble way. Going to church is in the line of respectability, and deep piety need not be supposed, but prayer and praise daily at home indicate more than conformity to the habits and fashion of a community. Can that be called a religious home in which there is no family worship? The world says nay, and so say we. There may be pious individuals in it, but there is no church in the house. It does not stand in the aggregate as a religious household, and its testimony in this capacity is wanting.

The family is a good place in which to learn to pray. One can afford to pray indifferently here till practice gives greater facility and self-possession. It is a good school of training for the prayer meeting and the public congregation, and for the sick-room. People who do not pray in the family usually pray nowhere except in secret. Shrinking from the cross at home, it cannot be borne elsewhere.

After all endeavors to excuse themselves, we imagine that this omission rests as a cloud upon the consciences of many fathers and mothers. They cannot be quite satisfied, nor altogether easy, and there is a shade of God's displeasure upon them. They are living in the neglect of a means of grace, and of an ordinance which is necessary for the welfare of their children. Without estimating the degree of guilt, or condemning too severely, we are persuaded that heads of families often lose ground and finally fall away altogether for the want of this most helpful assistant to godly living. The sons and daughters of a prayerless house cannot be expected to go out into the world braced for the inevitable conflict with sin, and fortified against temptation. They have never heard the father pray, they have never heard him read the Bible, they have never felt the gracious dews which distill about the home altar. Their filial reverence and affection have never been raised and purified by the noblest exhibition of paternal dignity and love. The father who does not pray with his family never rises to the highest and best realization of his position as the head of his household.

Prayer operates as a restraint upon doubtful and hurtful pastimes. It gives a sanctity to the home which rebukes and excludes reveling and pernicious games. Dancing and cards are not likely to be allowed where the morning and evening sacrifices are regularly offered. The houses of professors of religion may sometimes be desecrated by these practices, but not the homes that are hallowed by family worship. They cannot well exist in the same atmosphere, and be indulged in the same hour with prayer. Whatever is hurtful to the Christian life will be banished by the erection of the family altar.

Prayer in the family requires a deep and consistent piety. Wife, children and servants know us better than we are known in the church or in the community. Conscious inconsistency in temper, language and manners is an embarrassment which reaches its closest quarters at home. It is hard to pray with those who know our faults too well. Careful living and much grace are the conditions of free and comfortable praying in the family.

As to the manner, there should be time, each one should take part in reading the Scriptures, and all should join in the Lord's Prayer. If not always, yet occasionally let the commandments, and the apostles' creed as given in connection with the vows of baptism and church membership, be repeated by all. Singing should not be omitted. At least sing the doxology to Old Hundred or Sessions. Let there be always this much of praise. The Scripture lesson should usually be short, attended sometimes with brief exposition and questions, and let the prayer be short. Do not weary and disgust the children by prolixity in anything, and let the whole service be lively and cheerful. It is family worship, the church in the house, the children are all members, and let all have something to do. There are no aliens, no outsiders, no strangers here. The promise is to you and to your children: "Thou shalt be saved, and thy house." It is the place to gather the family under the wings of Jehovah, and to adore and praise him who hath "set the solitary in families."

Maintaining Good Works.

From the many precepts enjoining the performance of good works we may justly conclude that they are important in themselves, and that there is danger of neglecting them. Titus was reminded of the care to be taken in this direction by such words as these: "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men." The working side of religion must be insisted on. Justification by faith is the noble corner-stone of doctrine; the inward work of the Holy Spirit cannot be too strongly presented, and the heart must be kept with diligence. But the outward life, in its positive development, must not be overlooked.

In the related experiences of Christians we seldom hear much concerning shortcomings of this sort. There is much about tempers, frames of mind, lack of comfort and notes of inward backsliding, but rarely any sense of guilty omission in the path of active usefulness. Good works—such as helping the poor, visiting the sick, and personally laboring for the religious welfare of the people—are supposed to flow from faith as the stream runs from a spring. Love is scarcely compatible with idleness in the Savior's vineyard. Still it would seem that there are those who are so absorbed in looking within, and so intent on the mere enjoyment of certain emotional frames, that they find neither time nor disposition for active efforts to do good. There were some in Paul's day who abused the doctrine of justification by faith, and who fell into Antinomianism of set conviction, or from sheer carelessness. So it may be now.

From looking too exclusively upon the condition of pardon, and the grace which purifies the heart, Christians fall into this perversion. A one-sided religious habit is formed, and all the care is directed to the processes of the interior life. Besides, good works are in conflict with our indolence, love of ease and covetousness, and they sometimes carry us in range of worldly prejudice and opposition. To maintain them requires care. They are overlooked in the strain put upon the subjective elements of religion, and in the natural indisposition to do that which costs in the way of sacrifice and toil.

We do not know that our preaching is defective at this point, and yet it may be. Paul thought it needful to give Titus special instructions lest he should slight this capital part of a complete ministry. It may be needful to enlarge more upon the justification by works, and to present that side of the gospel which James enforces with so much stress. It is a thing to be affirmed "constantly that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." Without doubt the trouble is mainly practical. There is no speculative error, no warping and wresting of doctrine in the most, but simply negligence and partial views of the truth. Partly the preacher's fault it may be if he has kept back the counsel of God in this respect, or failed to affirm constantly the necessity of good works in the justified. Not for justification, in the sense of pardon, are works to be preached, but they are to be put in their true relation as the fruits of faith and love, and as a responsibility which, if not met, entails the loss of that acceptance which faith secured. It is assumed that truly converted people will work anyhow, and that love will seek this method of expression. It may be so, but light and guidance are needed, and the consciences of believers must be quickened and instructed.

Carefulness to maintain good works would seem to imply something more than a readiness to do a good and benevolent act, when the occasion is forced upon us, and conditions are favorable. It is something to be studied, to be searched out, and the opportunity to be made. Not to be busied in this way—not to be habitually occupied, to be out of work—should awaken concern. To be quiet and satisfied, and no good work on hand, is an alarming state for a Christian to be in. Carefulness should be directed to this as well as to the inward frame of the soul. The pulse of religious fervor and of enjoyment may be felt, and the state of the heart inquired into; but shall we not look without and see what we are actually doing? What about this carefulness in maintaining good works? We take it for granted that believers are zealous for faith as the justifying condition, that they are harmless, but here is something positive, outward, active, to be maintained with care.

Bishop Paine.

Our readers will be glad to hear from Bishop Paine. His recent long and severe illness has been the occasion of universal sympathy and anxiety. We are glad to know that he is better. May God spare him to us for many years. The following letter from the Bishop we take from the Western Methodist:

ABERDEEN, MISS., June 27, 1875.

DEAR BROTHER: This note is intended to answer the inquiries of many brethren and friends who wish to know the state of my health.

I was taken ill on the eleventh of April, in New Orleans, but left there immediately for home. At Mobile I was compelled to call for medical treatment, and Drs. Webb and Mastin promptly attended and administered to my relief; and I left at night for home on the Mobile and Ohio railroad. The trip aggravated my disease greatly, and I got home quite ill. I thought I had suffered in former sickness as much as one can endure and survive, but my agony during nearly two weeks was beyond all I had felt before, and my life hung in a balance. And now, although I suffer but little acute pain, and am gaining in strength, yet I am still too feeble to leave my house and yard. Once only I have ridden out in a carriage, and this is my second attempt to write a letter after ten weeks of confinement. From the nature of my disease—which I fear will be chronic—my physicians and friends enjoin it upon me to desist, for the present, from attempting to travel and labor—"to be quiet and try to get well." They accuse me of bringing on my sufferings by doing too much. I feel that I have done but little, and done it very imperfectly. Whether I shall be able to serve the cause of my Master effectively in any way hereafter I leave to him "whose I am, and whom I serve." His will is mine. I hope to be able to get out to a few meetings, and to attend the sessions of the two Annual Conferences—North Mississippi and Mississippi—assigned to me by my colleagues. Should I be unable to do so, I am assured my place will be supplied by one of them. Pray for me, as I do for all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever!

Your brother, R. PAINE.

The Delhi District Conference and the Naughty Publisher.

The publisher of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is a man of limited powers and acquirements, and, being painfully conscious of this, he has tried to limit his efforts to those narrow bounds to which his efficient action is confined for want of greater versatility and capability of endurance. Some of his advisers who take pleasure in arraying his supposed shortcomings in may be, and doubtless are, much more richly endowed of nature and by acquirement, and are able to decide on the genuineness of signatures, and thus "authenticate" business transactions sufficiently to lay them before the public in official documents, without waiting for explanations, or for the formality of counsel or of experts to examine and compare bills and receipts. The humble publisher, however, is confined to a much more tedious and plodding process. The burden of one department of business devolves on him as a necessity—that of seeing that over $400 per week is forthcoming to meet current expenses, and afford his patrons a paper well gotten up and with good materials. He does not feel that, even if relieved from all other responsibilities, he could take charge of the composing-rooms, the engine and press, or the folding-room, and much less the department of accounts, far more difficult than any. Each department of business has its head or foreman, selected for his supposed fitness for the position, who is held responsible for the work in his department; and the publisher does not interfere with the routine workings of any department so long as he finds its work satisfactory. He does not even go into their rooms except to give some new instructions or to obtain information, and in that case he seeks it from the foreman in charge.

Those who may erroneously suppose that the publisher keeps the accounts are assured that he does not spend, on an average, five minutes per day in the ADVOCATE office; that he has not made an entry in the books or made out a bill, to the best of his knowledge and belief, in three years; that he never sends out receipts except in the absence of the book-keeper, and then upon the information contained in his books. When at Conference or elsewhere out of reach of the accountant and the books, he issues receipts upon the best information at hand, usually upon the representations of the agent or person settling. If in such cases mistakes are made it would not be surprising. In case the mistake should be to the prejudice of the subscriber, he is ready at any time to refund when the fact is known, if the mistake is against the office. He knows that, although he may not have put E. & O. E. at the bottom, "errors and omissions" are always excepted by honorable men, and he is not afraid that any subscriber will screen himself from the payment of a debt, justly due, behind a receipt erroneously given in full of account. But in the official report the use of the italics makes the matter of the "well-authenticated instances" personal with the publisher, and not by a per pro., and the receipts those "sent out." The official report does not say that the duns sent "months after" were for the same time and amounts for which receipts were given; but this is the inference. Now we offer to send the paper free for one year to four widows or other worthy but indigent persons, to be selected by the presiding elder of the Delhi district, for every such receipt, with bill dated "months afterward," made out and signed by us personally, and "sent out" from this office, and make full reparation for any loss; and if can be produced he will send it free for one year to one hundred, as above.

The publisher, who had yielded five years ago to the almost universal request for indulgence to subscribers; owing to the stringency of the times and the destitution of the people, and had been drawn into the credit system, became fully satisfied, some months since, that there was no possibility of straightening out the accounts, so as to return to the cash system, by any other means than sending the statements of accounts, as they stood on the books, direct to the subscribers. That some of these accounts would not tally with the recollections of subscribers, or with receipts held by them, was expected. The number of remittances made cautiously and lost; the letters without name or address containing money; the advice of money orders in the postoffice, which orders never reached us, and of which no information ever came to hand, together with errors and omissions in forwarding subscriptions and renewals during five years, in which many subscribers had not seen a statement of account, were expected to provoke many expressions of surprise and dissatisfaction; hence he selected to assist in the special work of bringing up these accounts a of well-known experience and capacity, and distinguished for his patience and fidelity, who had for many years conducted the business of one of the oldest houses in the city, and wound it up after the death of the proprietor, to whose general knowledge of business was added a thorough acquaintance with our agents and their manner of doing business, he having been a traveling preacher and presiding elder himself for about twenty years. When it is known that we allude to the Rev. Lewis A. Reed there will be no question, in the minds of those who know him, as to the propriety of the choice for such a work. Our regular book-keeper was for several years intrusted with the entire charge of one of the stores of the wealthiest and most successful merchants in the State, from whom he has a testimonial certifying, in the strongest and most unqualified terms, his capacity, reliability and fidelity. When it is stated that he is the son of the late lamented J. D. Adams, of our Conference, and in point of honor and integrity an exact duplicate of the father, those who knew the father will know how to appreciate the son. Such were the men who labored, with the accounts and files of letters of five years before them, to bring up the statements, and it is due to them to say that, while no work connected with the publication of the paper has been so difficult and arduous, none has been performed more faithfully, patiently or efficiently, and that the complaints have been far less numerous than we anticipated.

To the good common sense of the subscribers we are greatly indebted. Some of them think their accounts not correct, but appreciate our difficulties, and agree with us that the only means of finding out where errors exist is to continue to send statements. A large number have written, thanking us in the heartiest manner for our indulgence till now. A number have sent ten dollars for arrears and five in advance for the future. Altogether, our good opinion of

has been greatly strengthened since sending out the statements of accounts. Those who have snarled at the idea of statements being sent them, to show how their accounts stand on our books—which a few have called "duns"—can be counted on the fingers of our hands.

It may be that complaints are made to other ears than ours by a few persons who are not anxious to state the grounds of complaint at the proper place for investigation; but we cannot think that there is any respectable number among our subscribers who would make alleged errors in accounts a subterfuge for not making inquiry in view of settlement with a creditor who has generously indulged them.

The causes of errors in newspaper accounts are too numerous even to mention in one article. We propose to offer a few of the most common. One trouble is

LOSS OF MEMORANDUMS.

About $130 have been paid to us in Louisiana of which we never received any knowledge of the parties to whom it should be credited till it was received from the subscribers themselves after sending statements. Wherever our book-keeper received a reply from a subscriber, stating that he held a receipt from either of certain parties, and found by reference that he was in the bounds of the proper circuit, he put his amount down as one of the lost memorandum payments, until nearly or quite all have been traced. Another trouble is

INATTENTION TO NAMES.

An agent will remit $2 for F. B. Jones in 1871; his successor remits, in 1872, $2 for Buck Jones; in 1873 another remits the same amount for Col. F. Buchanan Jones, and in 1874 the gentle-hearted Mrs. Jones comes out of the church, at the close of the last meeting, and hands the amount to an agent, without thinking any explanation necessary, and we receive an order to enter the amount to the credit of "Sister Patsey Jones." As neither the word "renewal" nor "O. S." is used in either instance, a new name goes down each time, and no one has ever advised the publisher, until statements are sent, that F. B. and Buck, and the Col. and Mrs. Martha Jones, were nothing more than Col. Franklin Buchanan Jones and his wife, to whom four ADVOCATES are going. No wrong was intended by any one; but the book-keeper was bound to follow the text of his instructions, and the publisher has to pocket the loss.

INATTENTION TO DATES

is a cause of temporary misunderstanding. A subscriber sends us a bill which he pronounces wrong, because he paid on the fifth of the month, without noticing that the statement was dated on the first, and showed how his account stood five days before he paid.

Another sent a bill to the ADVOCATE with an expression of his mind about our account-keeping. When we opened it we found it was not an ADVOCATE bill at all, but a bill for another account, which he found all right on being returned to him.

Another became excited over his statement, and declared the footing utterly erroneous; but when pointed to the fact that the amount at the bottom was a credit, instead of a debit, he rejoiced to find himself that much richer than he had supposed.

POSTOFFICES

are often given erroneously. A letter commences, for instance, with, "Credit the following persons at this office," and proceeds, having three for that office and some for two others. The first three are all right; but, failing to put in the proper place the names of the other offices, the names all go to one place. Some of them, as new subscribers, get the credit of the money, while bills are sent to those who had paid it. Yet the book-keeper had followed the strict grammatical construction of the order. Attention to would often save subscribers from hasty conclusions. A subscriber complains that he has a bill sent him for 1874. He "has all his receipts; never destroys any; paid C. in 1872, P. in 1873, S. in 1874; owes for 1875." Our entries show that these amounts came to hand and were credited; but there being no credit for 1871, the payment each year was for the year previous, he having fallen one year behind. But the above are only a few of the causes of trouble which grow out of hastily-written instructions and innocent omissions of indispensable information for correct entries by the best and most self-sacrificing set of men now living; and yet, withal, no other class except those educated for or experienced in business pursuits would do better.

In conclusion, I hope my brethren of the Delhi district will pardon me for saying that not one of the errors to which my attention has been called, within the bounds of that district, so far has resulted from negligence or incompetency in the account department here; and I am always willing and ready to demand the vouchers or authority for any entry which my book-keepers make when my attention is called to it in a respectful manner by the proper persons.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The time is fast approaching. In less than two weeks the people will have gathered upon the encampment where they have found the presence of the mighty One in former years.

We are glad to see that a good degree of interest is manifested, and our people are getting ready for departure, and some have already gone over and taken up their abode in the tents of Seashore.

To-day the trustees send out posters to be put up all along the lines of the railroads. The rates of fare have been reduced, and the invitation is: Come! With opportunities thus afforded, many of the people of the interior can get to Seashore with greater facility and convenience than to any other camp meeting.

Camp meeting tickets will be issued and on sale on and after Monday, July 19, in New Orleans and Mobile.

THE Sunday night services at the Academy of Music, in this city, are still kept up. The attendance is large, and the utmost decorum of deportment prevails. Hundreds not accustomed to attend church hear the gospel there, and it is believed that some have been led to repentance through the preaching. Rev. Dr. Markham, of the Presbyterian Church, delivered an appropriate and profitable sermon to a large auditory in the Academy on Sunday night last.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the notice of Plaquemine Brulee camp meeting, St. Landry parish, La., which will be held September 9. That is a camp meeting country, and they are pretty sure to have a good time. We thank the brethren most heartily for an invitation to be present. We shall try. For particulars see eighth page.

THE greatest misfortune of all is not being able to bear misfortune.

Read and then Lend.

MR. EDITOR: It is nothing new for you to hear of the comfort and pleasure your paper brings to the households which have the privilege of reading it. I have noticed, too, that in some instances it has been sent by charitable, generous persons to those who could not afford the price of subscription, and I have felt that no kindness could be more judicious and more productive of good to the recipients. Yet there are many who, with every inclination to do likewise, are hampered by the want of means, which barely allows them to pay their own subscription. To those thus situated I wish to make a brief suggestion.

After reading my ADVOCATE I send it to two persons alternately, neither of them in circumstances to subscribe for it. Three families are thus benefited by the one paper, and the day on which it reaches their hands is literally a day of rejoicing. Instead of destroying the paper, which many do after reading it, why will not each subscriber (I mean those who are not able to take two copies of the ADVOCATE) send their paper regularly to some one or two of their poor neighbors? It is very little to do I know, but is anything insignificant which will gladden the hearts of a single human being in this great chain of humanity? It may not only gladden, but strengthen and elevate, as the ADVOCATE so often does its attentive readers. Thus many of those whose power of doing good is limited by stern necessity may bring a blessing to some poor man's heart by this simple little act of kindness. It brings with it no expense, little trouble, and strengthens the bond of love and sympathy with neighbors.

M. L.

DR. HOLLAND, in Scribner's Monthly, says of the Roman Catholic demand on the schools:

"At some future time, we presume, the public will learn the reason of the recent attempt on the part of the Catholic parochial schools in this city and elsewhere to secure a portion of the public moneys for the sustentation of those institutions. This attempt could not have been made with any expectation of success. If a man, wearing a sober and friendly face, should approach his neighbor in the street with a polite request that that neighbor should accommodate him by committing suicide, he would hardly do it with the expectation of hearing an immediate report of a pistol in execution of his demand. The neighbor might possibly maintain a show of politeness, but he would go off wondering what the request was made for, and what was to come of it. He certainly would not suppose that the man who made it expected it to be granted. He would judge this request was the preliminary of some other request, or of some movement to which he intended to bring it into relation.

"This is precisely the request that the parochial schools have made of the public schools. 'Will you be kind enough, for our accommodation, to commit suicide?' The specific request of the Catholic authorities is not in this form, of course, but it just as distinctly involves the question as if the question were distinctly stated. The moment the public authorities recognize the right of a sect to public money, for the special purpose of holding its children together for sectarian instruction, they destroy the public schools, so far as any action of theirs can accomplish that end. One sect has no more rights in America than another, and the result of consent would be the abandonment of the public schools, and the transformation of our Board of Education into a Board of Apportionment. We have no State religion. We never ought to have, and we never shall have one."

REV. L. A. REED, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Algiers—on the opposite side of the river from this city—reports an encouraging revival in his church. Twenty have been received on profession within the last month, and as many have been converted.

ATTENTION is called to the card and notice of the State Female College. This institution is located near Memphis, Tenn. It is under the presidency of Rev. C. Collins, D. D., and is a very complete institution in all its appointments. We can most heartily commend it to the patronage of our people.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

Publisher's Department.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La.	$2 00
Nov. 10, 1874—From Canton, Miss.	2 00
June 18, 1875—From W. B. Spencer	2 50
June 14, 1875—From Selma, Ala.	5 00
Nov. 24, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Nov. 27, 1874—From John Walker, New Iberia	4 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Iancy, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 16, 1875—From C. C. Manning	6 10
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La.	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss.	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request of a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they did not always have the amount at the time the year closed, they would pay up when they could, we were led to give notice to our agents and subscribers, about five years ago, that "no paper would be stopped without an explicit order." Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid always before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper, do not direct the postmaster to return your paper. That will not stop it. Do not write upon it and return it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When you subscribe state that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so expressly order, send a postal card to renew it any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected these two simple methods, and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter inclosing pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly thereupon you may be assured your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, reading the notice "Second" or "third notice," when, on referring to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. But postmasters have been in many instances mistaken, and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Attend to it yourself if you want it done, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, will leave, July 1, for a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE National Railway Publication Company, Philadelphia and Chicago, issue the Travelers' Official Guide, which will be found almost indispensable to those traveling by rail in the United States. It has been adopted as the standard in the Quartermaster's Department in Washington in preference to Appleton's, used heretofore. The time-tables of the different roads are published in its columns, with maps showing the lines of the several roads. A general map of the whole country accompanies the Guide. Subscription, $1 per annum; single copies, fifty cents. Address as above.

LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK.—In another column may be found the semi-annual statement of one of the most prosperous corporations in our city. This bank, under the able and liberal management of Mr. J. H. Oglesby, has increased its business with astonishing rapidity. Mr. Oglesby deservedly ranks as one of our most vigorous and thoughtful financiers, and is assisted by a corps of excellent officers. We know of no bank officer, in our estimation, more capable, more faithful or more courteous than Mr. A. Luria, the cashier.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of Messrs. Baumgarden & Langles, of the Commercial Bakery. These gentlemen have long been known throughout this section as liberal and upright in their dealings, and we can assure satisfaction to any of our friends who purchase from them. The Graham Biscuits are made a specialty. They also have constantly on hand a large assortment of crackers.

DR. BARNUM.—We refer our readers to the card of Dr. J. W. Barnum, which appears in this week's issue. We have had personal experience of Dr. Barnum's skill as a dentist, and can recommend him most heartily. His terms are as reasonable as any could wish where good work is done. Our friends from the country in search of a first-rate dentist will do well to consult him.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Potatoes Mixing in the Hill.

There are many farmers, intelligent and well-informed on most subjects, but unacquainted with vegetable physiology, who firmly believe that different varieties of potatoes (Irish and sweet) will, if planted together, mix with each other so as to partake of the characteristics of both. But this is not so; it does not and cannot happen.

Potatoes or tubers are not seed in the proper sense of the word, but parts of a plant, and having the same inherent qualities as other parts of the plants; and new plants propagated from tubers, roots, vines, branches, buds or leaves will be the same in all respects as the plants from which they were taken, and of which they are in reality only a divided part. New varieties in nature are produced by seed. But plants, from some cause, do sometimes vary in some part—in color or habit of growth—which may be confined to a single branch or root; these are called bud variations or sports, and occur uninfluenced by other plants growing near. Art takes advantage of these sports to produce new varieties. A branch may assume a pendulous habit, or the leaves may become variegated; the gardener takes this sportlog branch and buds or grafts it on some congenial stock, and produces a weeping or variegated plant, as the case may be.

The same is true with tubers. A red potato may be planted, and in ten acres there may perhaps be one plant that may produce yellow potatoes, or a part yellow and a part red, or but a single tuber showing but a stripe of yellow; this is a sport and can be perpetuated. If a tuber is bedded that is part red and part yellow, the eyes on the red part will produce plants that will produce red potatoes, while those coming from the yellow part will produce yellow potatoes. I find one or more such sports nearly every year; this year I found one hill of red Spanish that was part red and part yellow, and on two different occasions I found the red Bermuda showing sprouts, which I propagated for awhile, but, finding it like the red in all respects but color, I discarded it; and now another party has the same thing—dubs it with his name and sends it forth into the world as a new thing. This may gratify personal vanity, but the world gains nothing, for the change is only in color. These sports are not caused by contact with other plants, as it happens with me every year that plants of two different varieties will be planted together (accidentally, as I never plant more than one in a place intentionally,) and they are as distinct when dug as others not in such close contact.—Rural World.

Mad Ants.

Don Francisco Velasques informed me in 1870 that he had a powder which made the ants mad, so that they bit and destroyed each other. He gave me a little of it, and it proved to be corrosive sublimate. I made several trials of it, and found it most efficacious in turning a large column of ants. A little of it sprinkled across one of their paths in dry weather has a most surprising effect. As soon as one of the ants touches the white powder it commences to run about wildly, and attack any other ant it comes across. In a couple of hours round balls of the ants will be found all biting each other; and numerous individuals will be seen bitten completely in two, while others have lost some of their legs or antennæ. News of the commotion is carried to the formicarium, and huge fellows measuring three-quarters of an inch in length, that only come out of the nest during emigration or an attack on the nest of one of the working columns, are seen stalking down with a determined air, as if they would soon right matters. As soon, however, as they have touched the sublimate all their statelliness leaves them; they rush about; their legs are seized hold of by some of the smaller ants already affected by the poison; and they themselves begin to bite, and in a short time become the center of fresh balls of rabid ants. The sublimate can only be used effectively in dry weather. At Colon I found the Americans using coal tar, which they spread across their paths when any of them led to their gardens. I was also told that the Indians prevent them from ascending young trees by tying thick wisps of grass, with the sharp points downward, round the stems. The ants cannot pass through the wisp, and do not find out how to surmount it, getting confused among the numberless blades, all leading downward. I mention these different plans of meeting and frustrating the attacks of the ants at some length, as they are one of the greatest scourges of tropical America, and it has been too readily supposed that their attacks cannot be warded off. I myself was enabled, by using some of the means mentioned above, to successfully cultivate trees and vegetables of which the ants were extremely fond. Notwithstanding that these ants are so common throughout tropical America, and have excited the attention of nearly every traveler, there still remains much doubt as to the use to which leaves are put. Some naturalists have supposed that they use them directly as food; others, that they roof their underground nests with them. I believe that the real use they make of them is a manure, on which grows a minute species of fungus, on which they feed—that they are in reality mushroom growers and eaters.—Naturalist in Nicaragua.

A Bird of Prey.—The Southern California states that the blue heron (Ardea Herodias) serves a most useful purpose in California in dieting upon gophers. These last little pests are the worst enemy that the farmer on the Pacific slope has to contend with. It throws up myriads of mounds in every field, thereby utterly deranging the plans of the agriculturist. But where these mounds are thickest there the blue heron statlous itself with its long neck on the stretch, and all its senses alert, watching for the appearance of the mound-builder. No sooner does the latter thrust its nose out of the ground than the heron, with a lightning stroke, sends his bill through it like a dirk, and lifts it out as on a skewer. The bird seldom misses its mark, but when it does, as though overcome with disgust, it spreads its wings, and, with its long legs streaming out behind, takes its flight to another field. It is also said that when the black birds swoop down in flocks upon the newly-sown grain the heron often stalks, in among them, and, standing motionless, waits until the unwary birds come within reach, then with a sudden dive transfixes one on its beak, and makes a feast of the dainty morsel.

Directing the Tops of Fruit Trees.—If you wish to have flavor in fruit you must hang it outside the tree. Inside fruit, or fruit grown in the shade, is sure not to mature. It will lack color; it will lack fragrance and flavor; will be less crisp and juicy. It is less healthy also. All fruit should be kept on the outside of the tree and distributed uniformly. It is no excuse to say the orchard is large. What pays in one tree will pay in a thousand. We may as well have good fruit, all of it, as not. Some trees will do their own thinning; but many will not, and must be attended to if good, fair and uniform fruit is desired.

By thinning and distributing the tree will be strengthened for future bearing. It will have a good look, with the fruit all visible and all alike, and all as good as sun and air can make it, and it is not so apt in a rainy time to become moldy.

Where the top is dense and the circumference close there should be an opening made at the apex—a thinning out of the branches. Some trees will do this of themselves, but if not it must be done by the primer—this not only to let the moist air out, but the moisture from the ground where the branches reach it, the tree seeming like an inverted cup, holding the moisture. Fruit inside of this in a wet season will necessarily be spoiled. There must be air and light, and a degree of dryness for the fruit. If a little sun gets through the apex or elsewhere it will not hurt any. It breaks the monotony also, and adds to the beauty of the tree. An orchard may thus be treated artistically and esthetically, and be made an object to the eye, while at the same time beauty will be heightened by the sense of the profit. Utility is always a good foundation for beauty.—Cultivator.

Walking vs. Trotting Horses. A writer in the Prairie Farmer complains that all the premiums offered at agricultural fairs for the performance of horses go for trotting or running, and none for walking. He says the various agricultural societies "say nothing of walking, which the farmers are most interested in. I have often wondered why that was overlooked, and had hoped that some one would bring it before the societies. What benefit is a race-horse to a farmer? If he wants to run or trot him for premiums or stakes, it will not do to work him as farm horses have to work. Besides, fast horses generally are not able to stand heavy work, and are not apt to be extra walkers. What the farmer wants is a close-made, muscular horse, weighing one thousand to one thousand two hundred pounds, that can walk at least four miles an hour with a cultivator, or at that rate crossing the field. It costs no more for a hand to drive a team that will plow three acres per day than it would to drive one that would plow only two acres." And why not offer premiums for fast walking oxen, which are needed as much as fast horses?

Cleanse the Manger.—The mangers of horses, cows and oxen, when supplied with cut fodder and meal, frequently become offensively sour in consequence of the decomposition of the wet meal that adheres to the corners of the feed boxes. This is apt to be the case especially when animals do not lick the corners entirely clean. If a small portion of feed is allowed to remain in the manger only a portion of a warm day it will become sour, and the offensive effluvia will taint the entire manger, so that an animal will often refuse to eat his accustomed allowance, unless compelled by keen hunger. The true way to manage mangers is to scrape the corners clean at least twice per day, removing every particle of rejected food. Then, if the manger does not smell as a butter-bowl, let the corners be washed out with hot water, wiped clean, and a handful of caustic slaked lime be sprinkled in the manger. If mangers are kept clean they will seldom become offensively sour. If an animal leaves a portion of his feed a new mess should never be given on the rejected feed.—New York Herald.

Training Petunias.—A writer in the London Garden says that a fine effect is obtained by his method of training petunias. He procures a number of hazel rods, each about two feet long, bends them like croquet hoops, and drives both ends into the bed, placing them at suitable intervals all over it. On these he ties and trains his petunias, which blossom more abundantly than usual under this treatment. Petunias have been successfully treated as if they were sweet pea vines, and trained on a slanting trellis. The trailing habit of this plant, especially late in the season, is not always sufficiently considered.

We have no flower among our annuals that keeps up a more constant, fresh and cheerful bloom, all through the season, until killed by frost, than the petunia.

Remember that that man's religion is worth little or nothing which has no dwelling-place but in his brain.

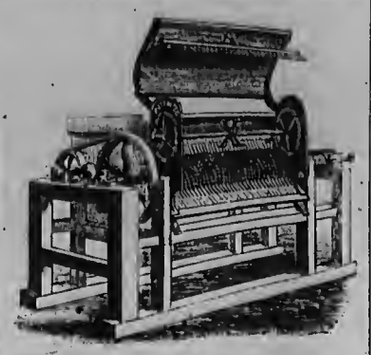
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



This Gin has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Schools and Colleges.

The Next Term of this Venerable Institution Opens on the First Monday in October, 1875.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. H. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——, Professor of Natural Science; and THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $12 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its humid and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

HOW THERMOMETERS ARE MADE. The glass tubes as received are about a yard long. A boy nicks them with a hard steel knife, and breaks them into the lengths required. The bores, which are flat, are compared, by means of a lens, with those of ten standard sizes, and the tubes assorted accordingly. They are then passed to the blow-pipe table. Each glass-blower has a foot bellows, and uses an oil lamp. Melting the glass at one end of a tube, he blows it into a bulb by pressing the sides of a hollow India-rubber ball attached at the other, proportioning the size of his bulb to the bore of the tube, and ascertaining the size by using a pair of callipers. While the bulb is yet hot the tube is inverted in mercury, which, as the bulb cools, rises and partially fills it. The tube is then withdrawn, and a short India-rubber tube attached at its open end. Into this mercury is poured; that in the bulb is boiled to expel the air, which rises up through the mercury in the India-rubber tube, and an atmosphere of the vapor of mercury now fills the glass tube and bulb. As this condenses, the mercury in the India-rubber tube takes its place, when this tube, with any mercury remaining in it, is removed. The bulb is now warmed, and the open end of the glass tube hermetically sealed. The bulb and a portion of the tube are immersed in melting ice, and the height of the mercury marked. They are then transferred to a bath at 62° Fahrenheit, and the height marked; next to a bath at 92° Fahrenheit, and the height again marked. The lengths of the three spaces of 30° each are now carefully measured. If they are exactly equal, the bore of the tube is assumed to be uniform, and the degrees laid off on the brass scale of the thermometer are all made of the same length. If the spaces of 30° each are not found to be exactly equal, then, by means of a highly ingenious dividing engine, the degrees on the scale are made to increase in length as the caliber of the tube diminishes. When the plate has been divided, and the figures and letters punched, it is passed, laterally, between rollers, to remove the burr left by the tools. Were it rolled lengthwise the accuracy of the dividing would be impaired. The plate is then silvered and lacquered, the glass tube attached, and the whole slidden into the well-known japanned tin case. One establishment turns out two hundred dozen thermometers a week.—Polytechnic Bulletin.

—The Engineer gives an account of an invention by which railway carriages may be lighted with gas, even on the longest journeys. The chief difficulty hitherto has been that of storage, and even where, as on the London Metropolitan railway, the journeys are so short that a sufficient quantity can be carried, the impossibility of guaranteeing the gas against mixture with air, which seriously impairs its lighting power, considerably diminishes its superiority over oil. For long journeys the ordinary gas reservoir would be too cumbrous, and if this defect is met by the device of pumping the gas into strong retorts under pressure, so as to carry it in a smaller space, coal gas deposits carbon, loses nearly all its lighting powers, and has a way of escaping through what are called air-tight vessels. To Herr Julius Pintsch, of Berlin, belongs the honor of having conquered these difficulties. He abandons coal gas altogether, and makes his gas from oil. He packs it in iron retorts at a pressure of ninety pounds to the square inch, and supplies it to the lamp through a very ingenious regulator. Some few of the Continental railways have already adopted this system of lighting. In England an experimental carriage has been fitted with it on the London and Northwestern railway, and has been running some weeks. The Engineer tells us that it carries gas enough in a receiver, made of wrought iron three-eighths of an inch thick, five feet ten inches long, and one foot four and a half inches in diameter, at five atmospheres pressure, to run twice to Holyhead and back, sufficient gas being left for a further run to Chester, if necessary. In other words, the carriage carries gas for over one thousand miles.

—The operation called transfusion of blood, which consists of pumping blood from the veins of one person into those of another, is growing in favor with the best physicians. It has proved particularly successful in cases of exhaustion from hemorrhage, and somewhat so, though in a less degree, in cases of chronic disease. Dr. Flint, an excellent authority, thinks the operation perfectly practicable, and advises that it be employed not only in desperate cases as a last resort, but in any case of a severe hemorrhage.

—The American Chemist says that a Western farmer discovered many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in the ground. Time and weather, he says, seem to have no effect on it. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents a piece. This is the recipe: Take boiled linseed oil and stir into it pulverized charcoal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and, he adds, there is not a man who will live to see it rot.

—A Philadelphia man is laboring on a new motor. He says that with two gallons of water he can generate force enough to draw a train of cars from Philadelphia to San Francisco and back again. He claims already to have developed a pressure of seven thousand pounds to the square inch with the machine he is constructing. It remains to be seen whether the new invention will necessitate the selling of our present locomotives for old iron.

—It is calculated that no solar eclipse of the present century will equal, in length of totality, that which occurred on April 6, except that of April, 1893.

—A medical journal says that if a few drops of carbolic acid be added to the tincture of iodine, the iodine will not stain the human skin.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50
By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents bulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74, consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. DUBOIS BROTHERS.

New Orleans Markets.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending July 8:

Red river	47
Ouachita river	30
Railroads	267
Mobile	187
Texas	531
Total	1,307

On Saturday, in the absence of dispatches from New York, the sales were confined to 125 bales, divided among four brokers, presenting too limited a business to serve as a basis for quotations. On Monday, telegraphic communication being still interrupted, the market continued quiet; but one buyer taking 220 for Havre, and another 270 to ship by the steamship Memphis, about clearing for Liverpool, the business summed up 625 bales. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices. Good cottons, with staple, fully maintained their previous position, and other descriptions exhibited no material change. Strict good ordinary sold at 13¾c., do. stained, with good staple, at the same, middling at 15c., and strict middling, with good staple, at 15¾c. On Tuesday there appeared to be little or no movement during the morning, but later in the day a few buyers came forward, and, two of them taking together 350 bales, the entire sales summed up 550 bales. The dispatches being, on the whole, considered as more encouraging, factors exhibited increased confidence, while there were fewer small lots pressing on the market and prices hardened accordingly, rendering it necessary for us to raise the inside figures for the medium and lower grades 1/8c., and the outside quotations for the better qualities to the same extent.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,300 bales, against 700 for the corresponding time last week and 1,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 992,762 bales, against 1,208,905 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 280,356 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 272,190—3,469,614 against 3,761,834. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 59,196 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 19,357 to France, and of 179,231 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Ordinary	12⅛ @ 12⅞
Strict ordinary	12⅝ @ 12¾
Good ordinary	12⅞ @ 13⅛
Strict good ordinary	13⅛ @ 13⅜
Low middling	13⅜ @ 13⅝
Strict low middling	13⅝ @ 13¾
Middling	13¾ @ 13⅞
Strict middling	13⅞ @ 13⅞
Good middling	13⅞ @ 14

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The annual camp meeting on the Seashore camp ground will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, enjoying the healthful and refreshing sea breeze. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent or temporary tents thereon.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $10, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has sent to the camp ground a large amount of lumber suitable for building tents, to be sold at reasonable prices to persons wishing to build or improve their tents.

A number of tents are built for rent to individuals or families, some twelve feet by fourteen, at $10, others twelve feet by twenty-five, at $15 for the period of the camp meeting.

Provision is made for good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents each for breakfast, dinner and supper, or $1 25 per day. Lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

Arrangements have been made with the railroads for conveyance of passengers, at reduced prices, by the New Orleans and Mobile road, from New Orleans for $2.50, and from Mobile for $2, for the round trip, and proportionate prices from all the way stations. By Morgan's Louisiana and Texas road, the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago road, and the Mobile and Ohio road, at half the usual price of regular fare. The first two of these roads will issue a special camp meeting ticket, with return ticket. The other roads will furnish the ordinary ticket, which, punched by the conductor, will be retained by the passenger; and at the office of the camp ground the tickets will all be stamped by the secretary to make them good to return on. In New Orleans tickets can be had at the ticket office, corner of Camp and Common streets, and at the depot, at the head of Canal street; and in Mobile at the depot, foot of Government street, and at all the way stations on the roads.

Passenger trains will leave New Orleans at 8 o'clock A. M., and 3.15 and 4.40 P. M.; and Mobile at 8.15 A. M. and 5.30 P. M., all stopping at all the way stations, including camp ground station, except the 4.40 P. M. express train from New Orleans, which will stop at the camp ground and all the principal stations.

Freight trains will leave the depot, at the head of Girod street, New Orleans, and at the foot of Government street, Mobile, at 6 o'clock P. M., and take freight to and from the camp meeting at half the usual rates of charge.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Hickey, B. O. L. Rayne, J. H. Keller, G. W. W. Goodwyn, P. Hallaran and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

From this data to the commencement of the camp meeting some one or more of the trustees will be on the camp ground almost daily.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
P. HALLARAN, Secretary.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 7.—A large meeting of Plymouth church pewholders unanimously advanced Mr. Beecher's salary from $20,000 to $100,000.

GALVESTON, July 8.—A News Brownsville special says a force of fifty cavalry and twenty custom-house guards, under command of Col. Parrat, escorted Cortina and prisoners to Bagdad. They shot and hung Maurico Portiguls, who had threatened to shoot officers of the Ninth Cavalry near Matamoras.

The gunboat Juarez, with the prisoners, sailed yesterday. She had on board arms and ammunition. Permission was granted to discharge her at Brazes Santiago, and bring them through Brownsville.

The Mexican papers claim the removal of Cortina will permit the authorities of Matamoras to execute the law.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The executive committee of the Grangers agreed to remove headquarters to Louisville by a vote of three to two; also resolved to hold the next national grange at Louisville on the third Wednesday in November. The headquarters will be removed to Louisville within a month or six weeks.

ST. LOUIS, July 9.—Gen. Frank P. Blair expired last midnight, surrounded by his family and a few intimate friends. He had been in a precarious state for several months, but under the blood-transfusing treatment had begun to grow stronger, and was generally supposed to be steadily improving. During the last few days he has taken frequent rides, and yesterday walked down stairs. His death came suddenly, and will be a painful surprise to his many friends who had confident hopes of his recovery.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Commodore George H. Cooper, in command of the Pensacola navy-yard, telegraphs to the Navy Department today that there are no new cases of yellow fever at quarantine there. The nine patients from the German bark Von Moltke are convalescent. No deaths have occurred since the last dispatch. There are no cases at the navy-yard.

A telegram received here this morning from Key West reports three deaths from yellow fever and two new cases yesterday.

CHICAGO, July 10.—Rev. S. D. Osgood, D. D., district secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, is dead.

ATLANTA, GA., July 10.—Gen. Henry L. Benning, of Columbus, Ga., died to-day.

LONG BRANCH, July 11.—Mrs. Algernon Sartoris, daughter of President Grant, gave birth this morning to a fine boy, weighing twelve and a half pounds. The happy household immediately telegraphed the news to the President, who is at present at Cape May. He immediately sent congratulations, and a father's blessing, by telegraph. Many friends arrived during the day to congratulate the happy mother, but by special instructions from her physicians none were permitted to see her except near and dear relatives. This evening mother and son were doing well.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Letters from Havana say the cause of the sudden departure of Gen. Valmaseda from Havana on the twenty-first ultimo was the news of eight hundred rebel cavalry having captured a Spanish convoy between Holquin and Gobora, in which the Spanish loss was eight hundred killed. The rebels afterward captured a fort in the town of Majagua, in which the Spaniards had taken refuge, and after executing the garrison blew up and burned the fort and houses.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, July 6.—Col. Long, formerly of the United States army and now in the Egyptian service, has arrived in Paris from his second expedition to the Nhum-Nhum country, where he is extending the authority of the Khedive. He brought to Cairo five specimens of the anthropophagi, including a female of the Akka or Ticke-Ticke dwarf race. The Khedive decorated with the order of Medjidye two negro soldiers who aided Col. Long in a desperate encounter at Lake Meroole, which Col. Long believes to be one of the many sources of the Nile. Col. Long leaves shortly for the United States.

MADRID, July 10.—Among the prisoners taken by the Alfonsists is a Carlist brigadier general and one hundred and seventy officers.

The Carlist Gen. Dorregaray is being actively pursued by the Alfonsists. It is believed he will attempt to take refuge on French territory.

The fighting on Wednesday near Nanclares, in the province of Alava, lasted five hours. The Carlists were under Perula and Carlos. They numbered eighteen battalions of infantry, with twelve guns and four hundred and fifty cavalry. Their loss was one hundred and forty killed, many wounded and a number of prisoners.

The Alfonsist Gen. Contreas twice brilliantly charged the Navarese with a body of eighty lancers, sowing death in their ranks and creating a panic.

LONDON, July 11.—Moody and Sankey had their closing meetings to-day. The attendance was enormous. Many persons were on their way to Camberwell as early as five o'clock this morning. Thousands were unable to obtain admission to the evening services.

LONDON, July 12.—Moody and Sankey's farewell meeting took place at Midway's Hall to-night. The Earl of Shaftesbury and Canon Samuel Morley, M. P., Right Hon. Cowper Temple, Mr. McArthur and seven hundred clergymen were present. Speeches were made full of praise of the eminent revivalists for the fresh life and energy they had introduced in the churches, and the steadfastness of converts.

A suggestion was made that a memorial of some kind be presented to Moody and Sankey, but Mr. Stone on their behalf said it would not be accepted, and nothing would give them more pain than such a step.

From the Work.

PENSACOLA AND WARRINGTON.—Mr. Editor: Pensacola has accomplished wonders in the way of home industry and steady progress. Not having the advantage of a cotton trade to cause her wares and productions to be daily quoted by telegraph throughout all the length and breadth of the land, she has been compelled to rely, in a great measure, upon the never-ending quantities of timber produced by the vast forests surrounding the town. Hence we are somewhat proud of our turpentine, heart timber and sawdust territory, and claim for it an even place with cotton in the commercial highways of the South.

Not alone to commerce, however, does Pensacola owe her great prosperity. Education and religion have contributed most wonderfully to the good cause of improvement; and to these mighty motors of a nation's prosperity we ascribe all praise. Our city is blessed with good schools, under good teachers, who seem always desirous of promoting a sound and healthy feeling in social and religious circles. The churches of Pensacola and Warrington have good cause to be proud of and well pleased with their pastors. Mr. Curry, the pastor of the Methodist church here, is a good man, in every sense of the word. He is a zealous worker, and has the hearty confidence and cooperation of all the members. Rev. Preston Nash, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Warrington, is greatly beloved, and is forward in every good word and work. His name has become a household word, and his coming is joyfully greeted.

The members at the navy-yard have recently completed their new church, and a few weeks ago it was dedicated with imposing ceremonies by the Rev. J. T. Curry, of this place. Dr. Shapard, of Mobile, had given his promise to be present and deliver the dedication sermon, but for some reason failed. The house was filled at an early hour by citizens, members and visitors from the officers' quarters of the naval station, and the most absorbing interest was manifested by all. When the dedication came the most profound silence reigned, and the mass of people there assembled felt indeed that they were in the house of God. The solemn words being ended, the organ pealed forth an ocean of melody, and, the congregation uniting, praises to the eternal One on high were sung. Afterward the benediction was pronounced, and the visitors and all left the newly-consecrated building and wended their way to the Masonic lodge, where a handsome collation of ice cream, lemonade and cakes was served. The building is an exceedingly neat frame structure, say about thirty by sixty feet—possibly larger. Neatness and a quiet elegance are at once apparent, and the general appearance reflects much credit upon the Methodists of Warrington. The interior is, however, the main beauty, the walls being high, and pierced at regular intervals by a series of large and handsomely constructed windows, admirably adapted for ventilation in summer, and for keeping out the rudor blasts of winter. Well-executed wainscotting, with dark walnut moldings on the walls and overhead, relieves the tedium of "bare whiteness" so common in our churches and dwellings. The seats are soft, springy slat pews—models of ease, comfort and beauty. Overhead, hanging from the ceiling, is a magnificent twelve-light chandelier, which, with the soft porcelain light over the pulpit, fills the house with a flood of illumination. The pulpit, while simple—being raised only ten inches—is a marvel of beauty. It is light and airy in shape, and painted pure white, with gold bands, panels and moldings, resting, under an exquisitely embroidered cushion of crimson velvet, holding the Bible. The interior of the pulpit (the floor) and the altar are covered with a velvet Brussels carpet, into which the foot sinks noiselessly and softly. The altar proper is inclosed with a graceful railing, also covered with rich crimson velvet. Taking it altogether, the Methodist church at Warrington is "a little beauty," and the people over there are justly proud of it.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our second round on the Shreveport district. The old story of hard times is running round in front and rear of the preachers; but, despite of this, there are enough of the "never-failing sort" to keep the preachers bravely moving forward. The work, in the main, we believe to be in a healthy condition. The greatest deficit in finances we found in the Anacoco and Leesville work, and this is not for want of resources. They have thousands of cattle, horses and hogs, and immense forests of rich grass, with beautiful clear-running and never-failing streams, small and large—the finest water power in the Southwest. The country is dotted over with small farms, but generally good, where they make plenty. And with all of these resources they are poor—that is, have but little money. If they would husband their resources, and turn their surplus into money, I do not know a country that would be more independent or better able to give a preacher a good living.

Many of the preachers are now looking forward to camp meetings. Some have camp grounds already built, and others are in the prospective.

We are just in receipt of plans for the collection of missionary money from Messrs. McFerrin and Kelley, secretaries, which we hope to have in practical operation soon. Some of the preachers have already obtained handsome collections.

From present indications we believe the future of the district to be encouraging. The crops have been well worked, and are good where they have had rain. We have enjoyed the pleasure of attending the examination at Mansfield Female College, which was very satisfactory. President Armstrong is the right man in the right place. He seems to have a peculiar adaptation to the education of young ladies.

MINDEN, LA., July 1, 1875.

Atlanta, Ga.

MR. EDITOR: I have been wishing for a cool and pleasant day to write, after my desultory manner, of our own highly-prized CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We have suffered extremely, even in Atlanta, the city of winding streets and picturesque buildings, environed with the beautiful shade-trees that give perpetual verdure and freshness to all around. In fact everything wears a cheerful aspect. Houses are new and tasteful; fine carriages and splendid horses passing all the time. How does this happen? Why these Georgia people are full of energy.

There is a revival spirit prevailing to a remarkable extent in this town and in the villages near by. I suppose that at least five hundred have been added to the three leading Protestant churches. In the Baptist church there have been many remarkable conversions. High and low, rich and poor, have caught the flame; and, thank God, it spreads abroad. The most excellent pastor of Trinity church, Dr. Scott, was encouraged by a gracious revival among his congregation. We attended some of those prayer meetings at half-past eight in the morning, and found them a blessing to all zealous in behalf of that service which brings us nearer to the cross. Throughout the week they gathered at night to supplicate a throne of mercy, and many have been added, who, we trust, will be an ornament to the church. Atlanta is blessed with a noble band of young men—the Christian Association.

Yours in Christian fellowship,

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

MR. EDITOR: Among the institutions of learning, honored and useful, which are the boast of the church and the land, this one occupies a prominent place. Its history, marked with great prosperity, extends back to the times before the war. Throughout this whole region are to be found many cultivated ladies who were taught and trained here. The buildings also, ample, well planned and substantial, are a monument of the success heretofore attained. But amid the general depression which came upon this section of the country it became necessary to close the doors of the school. There was an interruption of a considerable period, until one year ago, when Rev. J. A. B. Jones was elected to the presidency of the institution. After much consideration the way of duty seemed to be that he should accept it; so the task was begun, but with no brilliant predictions of success by those who saw the difficulties in the way. Bro. Jones has been efficiently assisted by Misses Eugenia and Matilda Jones, daughters of Rev. John G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference.

The session, which has just closed, has happily terminated all doubt as to the success of the undertaking. The closing exercises, from the twenty-fourth to the twenty-ninth of June, both by examinations and exhibition, set forth what had been accomplished in the months of study previous. To say that these exercises elicited much admiration, that they were eminently pleasing and satisfactory, would be only faint praise where much is due.

The local patronage of the school has been good, but its benefits should not be confined to this immediate community. These comfortable and capacious rooms and halls should be filled with pupils from abroad. Port Gibson is accessible, having daily communication with the Mississippi river, seven miles distant, by rail. It is healthy, lying just outside the malarial region, and yet at hand, that daughters may not be too far distant from their parents. This place, long settled, is noted for its churches, and for its intelligent and refined society. The charges of the college are moderate, which, with the small expense of travel in reaching here from any point in Mississippi or Louisiana, is a matter of importance in the present times.

The instruction here given is honest and thorough. Mental and moral training are both regarded,

> "That mind and soul, according well,
> May make one music as before,
> But vaster."

Mrs. Jones, the quiet lady who presides over the boarding department, will insure a delightful home to all the pupils who may come.

The musical department is under the charge of Miss Belle Tilden, who is well skilled and successful in teaching.

With these various advantages it is hoped and believed that Port Gibson Collegiate Academy will meet with that approbation and success which it so eminently deserves. The next session begins on the fifteenth of September, 1875.

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: Those who have visited the grounds are aware of its location, and the ample preparation for the multitude in the past. To those I can only say that there have been and are now rapidly being completed many improvements, the erection of new buildings, and a general preparation, under the personal supervision of the board of trustees.

Many private tenors are now on the ground, building. Some of them from New Orleans and Mobile are erecting quite large and permanent buildings. From all the indications this is to become a favorite seashore resort from the dust and din of the city, and where, free from toil and care, the weary soul may rest awhile.

I have been a sojourner here for the past month. Many families have arrived since then, and their numbers are rapidly increasing. Many will remain to enjoy rural life in this beautiful forest upon the gulf, and drink the excellent spring water, for months after the meeting closes.

Mr. Editor, you have been expected before this, in occupancy of that cozy cottage in that cluster of New Orleans tents, many of which are occupied. The Mobile delegation are also coming in. It would seem that as the Christian grows older his heart grows, too, in liberality. Religious services were commenced more than a month ago, at the first regular meeting of the trustees, conducted by Dr. Wadsworth, of Mobile. Since then the services have been conducted by faithful laymen, and participated in by fathers and mothers in Israel, full of faith and sweet song. That God may be honored and the people blessed very abundantly at the meeting is the prayer of all.

A SOJOURNER.

JULY 6, 1875.

Letter from the Rev. Y. J. Allen.

My Dear Bro. Haygood, As. Sec. For. Miss. Board: Since writing to you relative to the Wan Kwoh Kung Pau—my Chinese magazine—I have availed myself of the presence of S. Wells Williams, LL. D., at Shanghai, to ascertain his views as to the usefulness of the magazine in question, and the propriety of our Missionary Board fostering it as a missionary agency.

Dr. Williams has been forty-three years in China, during which time he has been left in charge of the Peking (ministerial) legation, to which he is secretary, nine times; has written a great many books on and for China. He is the author of the "Middle Kingdom," was editor of the Chinese Repository, the best series of works on China extant; has compiled several dictionaries, among them his last, recently finished, and nearly the size of Webster's, is regarded as his magnum opus, and is indeed a chef-d'œuvre.

The doctor was originally connected with the American Board, for a long time was superintendent of their printing establishment in the early days of missionary labor in China. He is perfectly familiar with the Chinese language, whether written or spoken, and has an intimate knowledge of the character of the people, whether in the medium or highest circles, and perhaps is more competent to express an opinion as to the value and usefulness of such a periodical as the one mentioned than any other person in China. I have much pleasure, therefore, in adding his testimony to those already furnished you. Dr. Williams, in reply to my note stating that I had appealed to our board for assistance, and asking his views as to the usefulness of the paper, and the propriety of a Missionary Board becoming identified with the enterprise, writes as follows:

"SHANGHAI, April 13, 1875.

"My Dear Mr. Allen: I have received your note of yesterday, asking my views respecting the usefulness of the weekly Chinese newspaper which you have conducted for several years past.

"It seems to me that the question before your society is not whether such a newspaper is useful among this people, so much as whether a Missionary Board should include the management in its plan of operations. I think the practice of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has been to encourage its agents to edit and print newspapers as one of the most promising means of reaching the minds of natives. I remember that, as long ago as 1844, when I was at Bombay, the powerful influence exerted by Mr. Hume's paper, the Dnyanodya, was regarded as very promising for the cause; and a paper started at Urumiah was one of the best means of exciting the attention of the Nestorians. The support of the paper soon becomes the best test of its usefulness, for the people in heathen or ignorant lands are not disposed to buy reading matter until they take an intelligent interest in its details and topics. Your paper has gone through this stage, and has vindicated its position and proved its usefulness by an increasing subscription list. But its discussion of religious topics makes it a constant preacher to most attentive readers, and thereby serves as a directly missionary agent. This people are wide-awake enough in their temporal affairs; but they know nothing of spiritual things, and a newspaper gives them line upon line as they can bear it, together with accurate information upon hundreds of other topics. I have sent your paper to the highest officers in this land, who, I have no doubt, have there read much they can never, in their present position, hear.

"I should greatly regret, therefore, to have such a religious weekly as yours go into hands who would gradually eliminate all its religious teachings. A missionary society does well to lend its countenance and support to a religious newspaper, through whose pages truth circulates to the remotest corners of the land; and when you can yield the management into the hands of competent natives you may well rejoice at this result of your labors. Believe me, most truly yours, S. WELLS WILLIAMS."

I have now, my dear Bro. Haygood, laid before you testimonials from nearly all the highest and most experienced authorities on the subject in China. I hope they will suffice, especially as there is a wonderful unanimity of sentiment expressed, and that the board will feel perfectly satisfied that they have done well in adopting it, or that they will, should they do so. And I shall therefore look to you for such support as will enable me to make it the best and widest circulated agency in China for promoting the enlightenment and civilization and Christianization of this great people.

I want to secure good and accurate illustrations for its pages, and also desire to have sufficient funds to secure good and able correspondents in various parts of China. Ten or twenty dollars per month, as a subsidy to writers, will enable me to secure such native correspondents, and it will greatly enhance the interest and circulation of the paper to have the remotest corners of the empire represented from week to week by regular correspondents. As a matter of course, there will be anyhow a great deal of occasional correspondence for its columns; but my object is to have all China represented regularly, and thereby increase the personal interest in the success of the enterprise until it becomes general, not only among the foreigners and native Christians, but among the "outsiders." A bright future awaits the magazine, and I only hope the board will be liberal in its aid. Of course I shall not relax my efforts to make it self-sustaining, if possible, and what I ask of the board is not with a view to abate my interest and efforts, but to enable me to work in hope, and without the fear of having to embarrass myself to keep pace with the increased demands of the paper. It has now already won a place, a name and a character among the Chinese and the foreigners resident in China, and my object is to yield to none in generous and liberal efforts in such a cause as it serves.

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, May 1, 1875.

Preaching in the Academy of Music.

MR. EDITOR: The seventh service of preaching and song was held in the Academy of Music on last Sunday, July 11. Rev. John Mathews preached an able and convincing sermon from the text contained in Matthew's gospel, ninth chapter and twelfth verse: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." The truth contained in this text was presented, with all the peculiar diction and illustration of the speaker, to a large and attentive audience. He dwelt especially on the sickness of the heart from sin, and presented the remedy—Jesus, a certain and positive balm. After preaching for an hour with peculiar force, the words being delivered in demonstration of the Spirit and power, the minister requested those who wished to be cured of their sickness to repeat, not audibly but to themselves, the lines:

> "Here, Lord, I give myself away;
> 'Tis all that I can do."

Then, before announcing the hymn, he requested all interested in the salvation of their souls to stand up, when about fifty arose for prayers. He then gave out a hymn, and called on all those determined, from this time, to serve God to come forward and he would take them by the hand as a pledge of consecration. More than a hundred arose from their seats in different parts of the house, and went forward and gave their hands in token of their purpose to seek the salvation of their souls. This movement was not confined to any particular class or age, but old and young, men and women, pressed forward, anxious to show their desire to be saved. New Orleans has never seen such a sight before. The audience were attentive and sincere listeners from first to last. The work, begun seven weeks ago, is gradually growing and extending. Good is being done—seed sown which will bring forth fruit to everlasting life.

In connection with these Academy of Music meetings there is kept up a daily prayer and conference meeting. About one hundred and fifty was the average attendance last week. God is hearing the prayers of his people, and will bless New Orleans. Droppings from the cloud of mercy are already descending. The Methodist church in Algiers has been revived and about twenty souls converted. The Coliseum Baptist church is having a gracious work; about forty additions in two months, and the interest still continues. There is still hope for a revival of all the churches and a general outpouring of the Spirit. Let the church abroad pray for us. S. K. R.

"An Old Catholic movement was initiated in Mexico more than ten years ago. The Old Catholic movement in Mexico is rapidly ripening into a well-organized branch of the Christian church that holds the faith in its primitive purity and integrity. There are now over fifty congregations in different parts of the republic of Mexico connected with this Church of Jesus. Two of these congregations hold their services in two beautiful former Roman Catholic church buildings in the City of Mexico, while another church building, the finest in the capital after the Roman Catholic cathedral, has been secured for the future use of this church. The Christian faith, love and zeal of its members impart a special interest to this Church of Jesus in Mexico. This church is very rapidly growing in numbers, in spite of the cruel and embittered persecutions that have assailed it—persecutions that have opened several martyrs' graves and impoverished many a family."

THE WIDOW'S PRAYER.

Father, the way is rough,
The path I cannot see;
My eyes are blinded by my tears:
Oh, Savior, comfort me!

The heavy clouds disperse,
And let the sun appear;
Or help me in the tempest wild
My Father's voice to hear.

Oh, Father of the fatherless,
My little ones defend,
For thou hast promised in thy word
To be the orphan's friend.

Oh, walk thou by my side,
And by thy presence cheer;
With thee for Counselor and Guide
I shall have naught to fear.

Oh, help me bear the cross
Sent to me from above;
For he who wounds can heal again—
He chastens but in love.

WINNIFRED.

My Christian Experience.

MR. EDITOR: My Christian experience is this: I know both the time and place the Lord converted my soul. And, having this knowledge of my conversion, and seeing that it agrees with all the Christian experiences recorded in the New Testament, I have never doubted my conversion for one moment, from the day of my conversion down to the present time. I am perfectly satisfied with it, and believe now that it is right, the views and sayings of Bro. George Bancroft and Bro. R. Abbey to the contrary notwithstanding; for all they say against my Christian experience, in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, bears with equal force against the Christian experience of all those recorded in the New Testament, for they all knew both the time and place of their conversion to God; for wherever a conversion is recorded in the New Testament the time and place it occurred are also recorded. If it be true, as Bro. Abbey says, that "the time and place of conversion, in my Christian experience, is a new-fangled theology, unsupported by reason, and unknown to revelation, and is extremely dangerous," then the Christian experience of all the conversions recorded in the New Testament is also "a new-fangled theology, unsupported by reason, and unknown to revelation, and is extremely dangerous." There are more than eight thousand of them, and their Christian experience is precisely the same that mine is as regards the time and place of conversion. I will add to these New Testament saints the Christian experience of millions of others, now living on earth and in heaven, who all know the time and place the Lord converted their souls. If my Christian experience is "a new-fangled theology, unsupported by reason, and unknown to revelation," theirs likewise is the same thing.

Now this argument is conclusive, and proves, as clear as noonday, that this saying of Dr. Abbey is unfounded and absurd. "But hold," says the doctor. "I have my own Christian experience, and the Christian experience of three-fourths of the best Christians in Christendom, to sustain it, who all testify and say they know that they are converted, but do not know the time and place the Lord converted their souls." Very well, doctor; but how can this be true when reason and common sense say that if a man has sense enough to know he is converted, he has sense enough to know when and where the Lord converted his soul? But if the man has not sense enough to know when the Lord converted his soul he cannot have sense enough to know he is converted to God. Hence I conclude that it is impossible for a man to know he is converted and not know when he was converted; for a knowledge of the work being done necessarily implies a knowledge of the time and place it was done. This must be true, unless the man was converted in eternity, before he had a being, or in time, in an unconscious state. Now if you say eternal personal election "is not the faith of your church," but that "three-fourths of the best Christians in Christendom" do not know when nor where the Lord converted their souls, because they were converted in infancy, and cannot recollect it—to this I answer: This assertion you cannot prove, doctor, and I am not willing to take your bare word for it in a matter that involves the salvation or damnation of immortal souls. But, for the sake of argument, suppose I admit your assertion "that three-fourths of the best Christians in Christendom were converted in infancy, and cannot recollect the time and place it was done." They must have been converted either before they were rational, without faith, or after they became rational, by faith. If the former be true, they were converted in unconscious infancy; and, if converted in unconscious infancy, how can they now know, in their conscious adult state, that they are converted?—that they were converted in an unconscious state of being? It does seem to me that for them to know in adult age that the Lord converted their souls in unconscious infancy is a moral impossibility. And, moreover, to suppose these adult Christians to have been converted before or soon after they were born, in their unconscious state, would be to suppose that all infants are converted in an unconscious state, without faith. And then what would become of the fundamental doctrines of our church, the depravity of the human soul, and the necessity of its regeneration by the Holy Ghost, in adult age, through faith? If the latter be true, they were converted after they became rational, and capable of exercising faith in Christ, and of knowing when the Lord converted their souls.

I believe in the conversion of children when quite young, because I have seen many of them, as I believe, converted. They said they were converted, and their actions, words and looks proved that they were converted and were happy in the Lord. If we will only let our little children solve the problem of conversion themselves there is no danger. But here lies the danger: we too often, in our zeal for the cause of Christ, and the love we have for these dear children, tell them they are converted when they are not, and they grow up to be men and women in the church of God, laboring under the fatal delusion that they are the spiritual children of God, when they are not. These respectable and useful members of the church, in many respects, are the men and women who do not know where nor when the Lord converted their souls, because they have been deceived on the point of their conversion from childhood. Their preacher, father, mother or some other dear friend has done it by telling them they were converted, when they were not. We ought to be very careful, Mr. Editor, how we deal with children on this point, for we are dealing with immortal souls. Let them tell us they are converted and happy in the Lord, and not we tell them. If we will do this they will always remember the time and place the Lord converted their souls; for I as firmly believe, as I believe that I have a soul to be saved or lost, that the true reason why so many of our preachers and people do not know when nor where the Lord converted their souls is that he has never done it. And I also believe that no truly converted man, who knows when the Lord converted his soul, will teach in the pulpit or in the press, at home or abroad, that any rational man or woman can be converted to God and not know when nor where it was done; for this would be to teach that the great work of God in regenerating the soul of fallen man was a solemn nothing; that the sinner's soul could be regenerated, and he not know when it was done. This is an exceedingly dangerous doctrine to preach.

Again, I cannot believe that any man can know when the Lord called him to preach the gospel who does not know when the Lord converted his soul. He may know that his friends have persuaded him to preach the gospel, and that the church has authorized him to preach, and that sinners love to hear him preach; but he cannot know when the Lord called him to preach if he does not know when the Lord converted his soul. He may know that men have called him to preach, but he cannot know that God has called him to preach the gospel; for the Lord converts the soul of a man before he calls him to preach the gospel. Ministers of this class, who do not know when nor where the Lord converted their souls, the spiritual children of God do not want to hear preach, because they believe that such ministers as these are neither converted to God nor called by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel.

Once more and I am done. The Bible knows but one saving Christian experience. But Bro. Bancroft and Bro. Abbey present two saving Christian experiences. This they do, by fair implication, in their theories of Christian experience. I will call Bro. Abbey's theory of Christian experience a strong-minded and weak-minded theory. The strong-minded part of his theory only saves "strong-minded men, with lion-hearted faith," like St. Paul, the New Testament saints and John Wesley, who all knew the time and place the Lord converted their souls. But the weak-minded part of his theory of Christian experience saves all such men as Nicodemus was when he came to our Lord by night, Simon Magus, George Bancroft and Dr. R. Abbey, who all know nothing at all about the time and place of their conversion to God. And as this is precisely the Christian experience of all sinners in Christendom, the weak-minded part of the doctor's theory of Christian experience saves them all. This is Universalism. His two different and conflicting Christian experiences among the people of God, who are his spiritual children, is Polytheism. Bro. Bancroft's theory of Christian experience is a harmonizing theory of Christian experiences, and leads to the very same consequences — Universalism and Polytheism.

JAMES SHANKS.

Irreverence.

The faithful embassador of Christ is often pained at the want of reverence that displays itself in the congregations to whom he preaches. Irreverence is want of respect for superiors, and especially for the divine Being. Reverence, it is admitted by all writers, moralists and philosophers, ancient and modern, heathen and Christian, is due from inferiors to superiors. It is conceded, further, that the degree of reverence should be proportioned to the elevation of the character to whom it belongs. According to this, how profound should be our reverence for God, the most exalted of all beings! Irreverence is a sin most heinous and offensive to God, and yet it is alarmingly prevalent. It displays itself at church in the conduct of those who should be worshipers, but instead are mockers and insulters of God. It is not confined to the young, giddy and wicked, but is indulged by the old, and even by members of the church. It arises from one of two causes, or from the combination of the two—that is, from ignorance of the claims of God, or from disregard to the moral obligation arising from an apprehension of these claims. If it proceeds solely from the first-named cause we can excuse it, precisely on the ground that we excuse it in idiots and irrational animals. But if it arises in whole or part from the second cause it is inexcusable. Will the thousands of irreverent, undevout mockers, who throng our churches in city and country, feel themselves complimented by such an apology? If not, we have no resort but to ascribe their irreverence to a bad moral condition. They know their duty, but obstinately refuse to do it; therefore "they shall be beaten with many stripes." As long as such a spirit is maintained it operates as an insuperable bar to salvation. We can cherish no hope of the repentance of an undevout, irreverent man. No appeal can reach him, no power, human or divine, can move him, while intrenched behind the impregnable walls of impiety, reared by his irreverence. With the silly exhibitions of this spirit before him in every congregation, is it any wonder that the faithful minister should feel discouraged? He knows that these walls must be battered down, and the Heaven-daring, God-insulting sinners be humbled into becoming awe and reverence before God as an indispensable preparation for the work of salvation. And while he knows this, and Sabbath after Sabbath solemnly proclaims to listless and impatient hearers the truths of the gospel, with no visible effect, he must be sustained by a consciousness of God's approval, or sink under the burden of his ministry.

How refreshing and encouraging to the humble minister to be permitted to preach to a serious, prayerful, devout congregation. I thank God, notwithstanding the prevalence of irreverence, that there are some exceptions to the general rule. The fixed attention, the reverent demeanor, advertise to the preacher that he has before him an appreciative audience. It operates as an inspiration to him, and hence he preaches with power, zeal and efficiency. Men do not, perhaps, intend to advertise themselves as wanting in reverence to God by the disrespectful manner in which they treat the services of his house; yet, whether they intend it or not, such is the fact. No one who has a particle of reverence in his composition for the character of God will treat with contempt and disrespect his worship. All conduct that tends to divert attention from the services—which consist in reading the word of God, singing his praises, supplicating his mercies, and expounding his truth—is an exhibition of an irreverent spirit, and an infraction of the common rules of politeness. There are some in every congregation who desire to worship quietly the God of their mercies, and any one who by his conduct disturbs these sincere worshipers, and thereby frustrates their pious intentions, betrays his want of reverence for God and his want of politeness to his worshipers.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

GOOD ADVICE.—President Porter, of Yale College, recently gave the following laconic advice to the students in the course of an extended address: "Don't drink. Don't chew. Don't smoke. Don't swear. Don't deceive. Don't read novels. Don't marry until you can support a wife. Be earnest. Be self-reliant. Be generous. Be civil. Read the papers. Advertise your business. Make money, and do good with it. Love God and your fellow-men."

A Glance at the Other Side.

MR. EDITOR: I have read from time to time, through your columns, the interest manifested by the stewards and people for the support of their preachers. While I do not think it has made me envious, yet it has made me long to dwell among such a people, and labor with them in the Master's vineyard. I am spending my fifth year in the itinerancy, and while I have not suffered the privations of many of my colaborers, mine has not been a cup filled with sweets. The first three years of my ministry I remained on one circuit, during which time I received $450, an average of $150 per year. The question will necessarily arise: How did I support my family, four or five in number? I can tell you. I preached on Sunday and hurried back home on Monday to the plow. On one occasion one of the stewards passed through the neighborhood and called to see me. Of course, being a lover of the Methodist Church, and all of her officials, we placed before him the best we had for dinner. Not long after that the question of preachers' support was brought up by the stewards, when this good brother remarked that he would do nothing, because "the preacher lived better than he did." Of course his church did scarcely anything that year. At the close of the third year my appointment was changed, which necessitated my first move since joining the itinerancy. I am now living in a beautiful place, among some noble, good-hearted people; but the great difficulty I find is that the people wait for the stewards to say how much and what they ought to do for the preacher. And hence we suffer from the effects of few doing. I rent my own house, and if the stewards have anything to say it is only to ask me what I gave for it. I pay the rent out of a meager assessment, and a little over half of that paid. Never yet has a steward asked me what was in my store-room. Mr. Editor, I do not wish to expose the names of these circuits, but only wish our people to have a page in the history of itinerant privations.

HON. JOHN WATTS died, at his residence in Newton, Newton county, Miss., on the twentieth of May, 1875, aged about seventy years. The deceased had, from his early manhood to within a short period before his death, been in official position in this State, of which he had been a citizen from his childhood. He has filled with honorable acceptability the position of legislator, district attorney, and for over twenty years the high position of circuit judge; and in all these distinguished positions, as well as in all his public and private relations, his dignified deportment, urbanity and fidelity endeared him to his fellow-citizens; and in his domestic relations the same characteristics secured the most devoted affection and confidence of his family. But it was not only the civil positions that Judge Watts so creditably filled that have marked his career in life. He had devoted more than thirty years of his life to the service of God; and in the church, and for the cause of Christ, he lived and labored. He embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1841. In 1842 he was licensed to preach, and after several years' service as local preacher he was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrew; and again, after four or five years, was ordained elder at Jackson, Miss., by Bishop Pierce. In the Sunday school, in the social and official meetings of the church, and in revival meetings, he was always prompt, earnest, energetic and active. His warm exhortations and earnest prayers will be long remembered by many who have often worshiped with him in these portions of the Master's vineyard.

Judge Watts seemed to be impressed, from the beginning of his last illness, that his end was drawing near; and when Dr. West—who was at his bedside for several days before death came—informed him that his condition was very critical, and there was but little hope of his recovery, he replied that he knew it and was ready. After giving directions as to some of his affairs he resigned himself to the hands of his Savior, and calmly awaited his summons to the spirit land. He is gone, and we miss his presence from among us; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Our lamented brother and honored fellow-citizen has laid aside the civic wreath that so long graced his brow for the "crown of glory that fadeth not away." And now, while we refer to his honorable life and the distinguished positions he so meritoriously filled, we are constrained to exclaim: "The best of all is, God was with him!"

His mortal remains were followed to the grave-yard at Garlandsville by his weeping family and a large concourse of his sorrowing fellow-citizens, and were committed to the keeping of the grave with appropriate ceremonies by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was long a member.

God, his Redeemer, lives,
And even from the skies
Looks down and watches o'er his dust,
Till he shall bid it rise.

MRS. MARY ELIZA HOWARD.

It becomes our painful duty to record the untimely death of this estimable Christian lady. This sad event occurred at China Grove, Pike county, Miss., May 23, 1875.

Mrs. Howard was the eldest daughter of N. S. and M. M. Neal. She was born in Carroll county, Miss., August 23, 1838. Her parents were members of the Presbyterian Church. In her girlhood she was converted and was received into that communion. She was married to Rev. P. Howard, of the Mississippi Conference, March 31, 1863. After her marriage, by the advice of her mother, she transferred her membership to the church of which her husband was a minister, thinking she could be more useful in her capacity as a minister's wife by so doing. And truly she was a helpmate to her husband in his self-sacrificing labors as an itinerant Methodist preacher.

God blessed them with seven children, but quickly took four of them back, and with them he drew more than ever the heart of this Christian woman to heaven. Under these bereavements she rapidly ripened for the good world. Her piety became deep and uniform, while her patient submission to the will of God was remarkably beautiful.

At the session of our last Annual Conference Bro. Howard was appointed to East Baton Rouge circuit, but was afterward transferred to China Grove circuit. Mrs. Howard, during her residence at China Grove, made many warm friends.

On Sunday, May 16, she was at church in her usual health, both at eleven A. M. and at eight P. M. The next day, while on a visit to a friend, she was taken sick. She returned home saying she apprehended that if she did not go home then she would never get there again. Her husband, who was absent, was sent for, medical aid was procured, friends gathered in, and every effort was made to avert the dreadful event, but all in vain. The Master had called, and it was beyond the power of man to revoke the call. She spoke calmly of death as being fully prepared for it, gave full directions concerning her children, and said to her weeping friends around her bed that her stay among them had been short and sweet. And it had been as sweet to them as to her. They miss her from their circle, and feel that they have lost a friend and sister in her death. She died on Sunday, May 23, after six days' illness. Her husband, with the three little children, are left sad and lonely. May they have the sympathies and prayers of his brethren in the ministry.

W. B. LEWIS.

MISS EMMA CAMERON was born in Pickens county, Ala., May 27, 1844, and died at Guntown, Miss., May 22, 1875. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the early age of nine years, and thereafter led a life of piety and consistency, ever evincing the truth that the youthful affections are capable of Christian influences, and that the young and tender heart may in very early life be touched and refined by the operations of the blessed Spirit. But, notwithstanding her life was blameless in the eyes of all her associates and friends, she felt the need of a deeper work of grace in the heart, and with diligence and faith she sought for a more perfect state of acceptance, and about seven years ago she realized that Jesus has power to cleanse from all sin. She reached a degree in that "higher life" that we believe is attainable by all Christians, whereby she could daily rejoice in God, and that enabled her to let her light so shine that an emanation of beauty ever attended her pathway. More than three months ago the hand of affliction was laid heavily upon her, and she patiently endured the will of her heavenly Father, bearing with meekness and quietness her extreme suffering, and expressing her implicit trust in that Savior in whom she always confided, till, a few days previous to her death, disease gained the mastery over her mind, and she passed from the sufferings of earth unconscious of weeping friends; and we fully believe she is now realizing the precious promises of God to those who put their trust in him. To the members of her church we say: "Though her seat is vacant in your earthly sanctuary, she is filling her place in the church triumphant;" and to her associates, whom she met so frequently in the temperance hall: "Though you have lost one of your truest members, you still have her beautiful example left you." We will miss her in the congregation, in the Sabbath school, at the sick-bed, yet we rejoice that our loss is her eternal gain.

A FRIEND.

PERMELIA F. WILLIAMS, daughter of Rev. G. and Margaret Winn, was born December 3, 1824, and died at her residence, near White Plains, Calhoun county, Ala., May 15, 1875. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when a child. Having been taught the principles and doctrines of our holy religion by her parents, who were deeply pious, she grew up to be a faithful Christian and a devoted member of the church.

March 24, 1842, she was united in marriage, by Rev. T. Moody, to James E. Williams, and for twenty-one years they lived and toiled and labored together most happily, when Bro. Williams was called to his reward above, and left her with eight children to train for the church and for God, one of whom has since gone to the church above, and seven are in the church below. She was a Christian of the true type, performing faithfully all the duties of a true disciple of Christ. She was greatly afflicted for two years before she died—one whole year confined to her room; but she was a patient, resigned sufferer. While confined to her bed she read her Bible, taught her children, communed with her Savior, and often, though with a feeble voice, she sang the praise of God. For some time before she died she was not able to talk; but for an hour before the soul was borne by seraph wing to realms above she admonished her children, and praised the Lord with supernatural strength. In her very last moments she repeated many of the promises of the Savior and parts of favorite hymns, and in perfect consciousness died gloriously happy.

R. A. TIMMONS.

MISS JULIA E. WRIGHT, daughter of David and Irena Wright, was born February 11, 1861, in Cobb county, Ga., and died in Calhoun county, Ala., June 25, 1875. It is but seldom that we are called upon to record the death of a young lady who promised more to the church of which she was a member, or to the community in which she lived. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about three years since, under the ministry of Dr. T. G. Slaughter, and from that time to the day of her death was an exemplary member of the same. In all the relationships of life she filled her part well. As a Christian she feared God and kept his commandments. She was the light of her home, and the joy of her parents' heart. She attended regularly all the ordinances of the church. The Bible was her constant companion, and she practiced in her daily life its blessed truths. Two years before her death she seemed to have a presentiment of the approaching dissolution, and often expressed to her devoted mother her willingness "to depart and be with Christ." Thus she lived in the triumphs of a living faith.

She leaves a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn her loss. May the Lord comfort their hearts, and bring them all to heaven at last.

JOHN L. FERGUSON.

WILLIAM DENNY, son of Dr. James I. and Mrs. Caroline A. Brumley, was born in Port Gibson, Miss., November 22, 1870, and died near Brandywine, Claiborne county, May 26, 1875. Willie was an only child, bright and intelligent beyond his years, and a source of great joy to his parents. He had been carefully trained in the ways of religion, and before his death he talked much about going to be with the Savior in heaven.

DIED, In Harrisonburg, La., on the seventh of December, 1874, in the freshness and innocency of childhood, JAMES DEKALB, infant son and only child of Mr. S. L. and Mrs. Abby C. Elam. Little Jimmie was born in Franklin parish, La., on the eleventh of September, 1871, was baptized during the year 1873, and was born again on the seventh of December, 1874.

A LONDON JOURNAL says: "If the name of the inventor of the penny post is required, almost everybody would answer 'Hill.' But the invention is at least a couple of hundred years old. In Macaulay's History we read (chapter 3:) 'In the reign of Charles the Second an enterprising citizen of London, William Dockwray, set up, at great expense, a penny post, which delivered letters and parcels six or eight times a day in the busy and crowded streets near the Exchange, and four times a day in the outskirts of the capital.' Does London contain any monument to so remarkable a citizen as William Dockwray?"

THE best thing in the world is to live above it.

I'M GROWING OLD.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

My days pass pleasantly away,
My nights are blessed with sweetest sleep,
I feel no symptoms of decay,
I have no cause to mourn or weep.
My loss are impotent and shy,
My friends are neither false nor cold,
And yet of late I often sigh:
I'm growing old!

My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news,
My growing apathy for rhymes,
My growing love for easy shoes,
My growing hate of crowds and noise,
My growing fear of catching cold,
All tell me in the plainest voice—
I'm growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff,
I'm growing dimmer in the eye,
I'm growing fainter in my laugh,
I'm growing deeper in my sigh;
I'm growing careless of my dress,
I'm growing frugal of my gold,
I'm growing wise, I'm growing—yes—
I'm growing old!

I feel it in my changing taste,
I see it in my changing air,
I see it in my growing waist,
I see it in my snowing hair;
A thousand hints proclaim the truth,
As plain as truth was ever told,
That even in my youthful youth
I'm growing old!

Ah, me! my very laurels breathe
The tale in my reluctant ears;
And every boon the hours bequeath
But makes me debtor to the years.
Even Flattery's honeyed words declare
The secret she would fain withhold,
And tell me in "How young you are!"
I'm growing old!

Thanks to the years whose rapid flight
My somber muse too sadly sings;
Thanks for the gleams of golden light
That blot the darkness of their wings—
The light that beams from out the sky
Those heavenly mansions to unfold,
Where all are blest, and none may sigh:
"I'm growing old!"

The Moravian Church In Germany.

BY MRS. F. M. BLANCHARD, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

There is a good old saying that "the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church." The Reformed Church of the Moravians sprung from the blood of John Huss, certain of whom were his followers, and preserved his doctrines through long years of severe persecutions. In the year 1722 these suffering people found a kind friend in a certain German nobleman, Count Zinzendorf. He sheltered and protected them on his own estate of Bertholdsdorf, in Lusatia, and bestowed on them a piece of ground near Hutberg, or Watch Hill, which afterward became the famous village of Herrnhut (watch of the Lord.) The count became their director, and formed them into a church on their own principles and discipline. Hundreds flocked here for protection. The Saxon government became alarmed, and forbade the count to receive any more. On this he left Herrnhut, took holy orders, and became a kind of missionary. Some others were sent to carry the gospel to Greenland. The missionary spirit increased among them. They began to scatter abroad to preach the gospel in other lands, and ever since this time their untiring efforts in missionary lands have excited the admiration of all interested in the cause. Some of their practices are peculiar. They have brotherhoods and sisterhoods, although this does not prevent their marriage. Often their wives are chosen by lot. For instance, when a brother is about to go abroad as a missionary and has no helpmate, and has no particular preference, he refers the matter to the elders of his fraternity, who make it the subject of special prayer, that the Lord will direct their and his choice. Then they select a certain number of names of the females whom they judge most suitable, and he draws one by lot. She on whom the lot falls is not compelled to marry against her will, but she usually accepts, and the marriage seldom proves unhappy. They have numerous festivals, on account of which they have almost daily services, and their services are greatly enhanced by the beautiful hymns, which they sing with great effect. They have the finest collection of hymns in existence. The children begin to memorize them at an early age, and this becomes a part of their daily task. They claim their ordination to have descended in regular succession from the ancient Bohemian church, which claims its derivation from the apostles. When the Lord's Supper is administered each communicant exchanges the kiss of peace with his next neighbor, right and left, before receiving the bread and wine, which they receive standing. The elements are distributed by the pastor, sometimes assisted by his wife, she carrying the plate and cup for him. The men and women occupy separate sides of the church. Their festal services are very impressive. On Easter morning they assemble at an early hour, "while it is yet dark," and, if the weather permits, the whole congregation proceed to the burial ground in remembrance of Mary Magdalene, and there sing the latter part of the litany among the tombs. They have no very poor among them, as they help each other, and consider it no sin to work for the poor on the Lord's day, maintaining that it is a work of charity and love, and therefore not wrong. They have several schools for boys and girls under the supervision of the brothers and sisters. Here the young receive a liberal education, and the heart is cultivated as well as the head. Religion becomes the chief source of their daily enjoyments. Under the tutorship of these pious men and women the young are reared to become, in their turn, missionaries, teachers and Christian parents.—Interior.

A Calamity In Iceland.

About six weeks ago there was a heavy rain of ashes and cinders along the northern coast of Norway, covering the ground several inches deep. Investigations revealed the fact that these strange materials, coming from a northwesterly direction like immense clouds through the air, were of volcanic origin. It was at once thought that there must have been an eruption of Mount Hecla, in Iceland. A steamer was dispatched from Copenhagen, and that vessel has returned from Rejkjavik with news of an unparalleled disaster. It seems the outbreak began on Christmas, and has continued ever since with scarcely any interruption. For seven weeks before Christmas the inhabitants were terrified by subterraneau noises like thunder, which extended through nearly two-thirds of the Islands. Early in January followed earthquakes in all directions, and at last an old volcano near Vatnayskud opened, and for four weeks continued to eject immense quantities of liquid fire, lava, ashes, and a muddy fluid mass at boiling heat. The village, and smaller hamlets and farms within a radius of twenty miles, were destroyed, and over a thousand people had to flee for their lives.

After four weeks this volcano ceased; but at that moment another extinct volcano, nearly a hundred miles away, near Myvatu, sent its burning mass upon the peaceful habitations around. This eruption lasted several weeks, the village of Myvatu became a prey to the fiery elements, and the whole country for more than fifty miles around was devastated. More than eight hundred of the people are reported as having been rendered homeless. Early in March there seemed to be a general upheaval of the earth in the whole central portion of the island. New mounds, as it were, rose to the surface, some to the height of several hundred feet, and over a thousand feet in diameter at the base, amid tremendous shocks of thundering beneath. They split open at top and vomit forth their burning contents upon the surface around them, covering a distance of two hundred miles. Ten thousand people are said to have lost nearly all their possessions, and the remainder, who live nearer to and along the coast, some forty thousand in number, are themselves too poor to support such a vast number of needy people. Several hundred persons are also reported to have perished. The world-renowned geysers have dried up since the terrible eruption began, and instead of water these mysterious funnels emit immense quantities of hot smoke and ashes, which during the night, rising several thousand feet in the air, appear like gigantic columns of fire, visible for hundreds of miles. It is said that no historic record of any volcanic eruption anywhere in the world compares with this, either in territory over which it extends, the number of newly-opened craters, or the time of its duration. The Copenhagen government has issued an appeal for aid in behalf of the sufferers.

Faithful Dogs.

Yesterday morning we gave an account of a child wandering away from home on Thursday last, accompanied by two dogs. The whole neighborhood had turned out and searched night and day, without success, at the time we wrote the account.

From Mr. Carroll, the popular baggagemaster of the Lexington passenger train, we learn the following particulars of the discovery of the child yesterday morning, which certainly shows the wonderful sagacity and faithfulness of the dogs which accompanied him.

As in our account yesterday, the last seen of the child was in a fence-corner with his dogs. From there, it seems, he wandered into the woods belonging to Judge Woods, eight miles from Lexington and three miles from his home. Here, probably, night overtook the little wanderer, and darkness closed upon him, cold, tired and hungry, with none to aid him but his faithful four-footed companions. The nights at this time of the year are too severe for a robust man to be exposed, and certainly a tender child, almost an infant, would surely succumb to the biting temperature.

But there is a watchful Providence above, and his interposition in this case seems miraculous. The faithful dogs, with an instinct that seems equal to human intelligence, went to work and scratched together a bed of leaves. Into this the boy crept, and then the intelligent animals laid down, one on each side of him, and kept him warm through the night with the heat of their bodies.

Morning broke with the boy safe, his shaggy guardians remaining at their post. Though rested and refreshed, he was almost famished with hunger. Again the wonderful instinct of the faithful dogs was equal to the emergency. They set out foraging, chased and killed a rabbit, and brought it to their young charge, laying it at his feet. The boy eagerly ate of the raw meat, and when discovered was busily engaged in appeasing his hunger.

When the party who discovered him endeavored to approach the child the dogs became exceedingly ferocious, and would not let one of them approach him. The boy's father and dogs' master had to be sent for before they could get the child from his noble protectors.

The joy of the parents can be easily imagined, and we will guarantee to say that all the wealth of Lafayette county would not purchase one of these dogs.—Sedalia (Mo.) Democrat.

Shrewd Retorts.

A preacher of the gospel, on being introduced to a skeptic, with the explanation that the man was a skeptic, in the midst of an extended circle of friends, said to him:

"I suppose, then, you do not believe anything."

"O yes," replied the skeptic, "I do believe many things."

"Will you, then," said the preacher, "be so good as to tell me what you do believe?"

The skeptic replied: "I do not believe that old story of the Bible about Cain obtaining a wife in the land of Nod, where there was nobody living."

"Never mind what you don't believe," said the preacher; "no doubt there is much of that; but tell us what you do believe."

The skeptic rallied and said: "Well, I will tell you. I don't believe the account given by Moses that God commanded the Midianites to be destroyed."

"I am not inquiring for what you don't believe, but what you do believe."

Recovering himself a little, and clearing up his voice, he made a desperate effort, saying: "I don't believe that old fable of the Bible that God commanded the Canaanites to be destroyed."

His belief was all disbelief. It commences all the time with "I don't believe."

A Romanist once said to a Christian: "You Protestants could not prove your Bible if it were not for the Holy Catholic Church and her great men."

"True," said the Christian, "for the Bible predicted that there would be such an apostate church and priesthood, and here you are, just as the Bible said."

After hearing a discourse, in which much was said by the preacher about God, a skeptic said to him: "What is this God about whom you have been saying so much?"

The preacher replied: "God is a Spirit."

The skeptic fiercely followed up: "What is a Spirit?"

The preacher quickly turned on him and inquired: "What is a cornstalk?"

"Why—why—why—it is a cornstalk."

"Yes, sir," replied the preacher, "a spirit is a spirit, and if you cannot tell what a cornstalk is, which you have seen thousands of times, and know has an existence, why do you ask me to tell you what Infinite Spirit is, or doubt his existence?"

EVERY ONE WILL GET TO HEAVEN WHO COULD LIVE THERE.—This saying of an old divine was probably suggested by such Scripture truths as these: "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth;" "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." If heaven were a Mohammedan paradise, then a voluptuary might enjoy it. If heaven were a region for digging and amassing gold and silver, a miser might enrich himself there. If heaven were an arena of contests for superiority, an ambitious man might become great in it. If heaven's services consisted of showy externals, a formalist would be an acceptable worshiper. But if heaven is inhabited only by the pure in heart, the unregenerate, the unholy, would never feel at home there. They would find nothing to do, nothing to delight in. They would weary of its pure and sacred scenes and services, and would long to be gone; and away they must go to some more congenial abode of unholy beings like themselves, even to their "own place." "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

THERE is one noble means of avenging ourselves of unjust criticism; it is by doing still better, and silencing it solely by the increasing excellence of our works. This is the only true way of triumphing; but if, instead of this, you undertake to dispute, to defend, or to criticise by way of reprisal, you involve yourself in endless troubles and disquietudes, disturb that tranquillity which is so necessary to the successful exercise of your pursuits, and waste in harassing contests that precious time which you should consecrate to your art.—Canova.

"TWO THINGS a master commits to his servant's care," said one—"the child and the child's clothes." It will be but a poor excuse for the servant to say: "Sir, here are all the child's clothes, but the child is lost!" So with the account that many will give to God of their souls and bodies at the great day. "Lord, here is my body; I was very grateful for it; I neglected nothing that belonged to it; but as for my soul, that is lost and cast away forever. I took little care and thought about it."—Flavel.

IN THE office of one of the hotels recently a gentleman snapped his finger to a boot-black, and as he put his foot on the box he said: "You look like a good, smart boy." "See here, mister!" replied the boy as he rose up, a brush in either hand, "I've had that game played on me a dozen times, and now I want to know whether this is a cash shine or whether you're going to pat me on the head when I'm through and tell me that I'll be Governor of Michigan some day?"—Detroit Free Press.

A BENEVOLENT gentleman from Vermont applied to a Boston gentleman for aid in sending a Vermont missionary to Turkey. The reply was as follows: "I have invested much in Vermont securities, and lost many thousands by the acts of your railroad men, sustained by the people and the courts. I have also lived in Turkey and had much intercourse with her people. I would far rather give my money to send Turks as missionaries to Vermont."

AFTER dinner one day, at a Liverpool table d'hote, a young man was reading how he had miraculously escaped from a fearful shipwreck. "Yes," said he, "fifteen of my friends were on board. The vessel went down, and they were all lost." "But how," asked a listener, whose interest was painfully excited, "did you manage to escape?" "Oh," was the calm reply, "I was on board another vessel."

PRAYER, if I may speak so boldly, is intercourse with God. Even if we do but lisp, even though we silently address God without opening our lips, yet we cry to him in the inmost recesses of the heart, for God always listens to the sincere direction of the heart to him.—Clement of Alexandria.

HOW deeply rooted must unbelief be in our hearts when we are surprised to find our prayers answered.—Maria Hare.

—The Society of Friends has 14,199 members in England.

—In Labrador there are 50,057 adherents of the Church of England and 35,099 Wesleyans.

—The Wesleyans of England have had the unusual increase of over 6,000 persons in membership during the past year.

—The Foreign Board of Missions of the Southern Baptists report the receipts for 1874 to be $33,218.35. The Home Board receipts for the same time were $23,478.89.

—The Waldensian mission in Italy reports 180 communicants received during the past year, and 367 candidates under instruction. It has 33 churches and employs 97 agents.

—The Baptist work among the Rabbas and Garos, in Assam, is going on with encouraging results. In visiting the Hill Country Dr. Bronson found old converts steadfast in their renunciation of demon worship, and he baptized a number of candidates. Native teachers have been stationed among them and schools opened.

—The Old Catholics in Italy have rejected the decrees of the Vatican Council and have begun the organization of a National Church. Votes to the number of 2,739 were cast for the first bishop of the church. Among its members are deputies of the National Parliament, members of the bar, priests, literary men and numerous representatives of the working classes.

—Further conversions, says the Church Times, are reported from Poland of United Catholics to the Orthodox Greek Church. No less than 243 parishes, with 202 priests (including the cathedral clergy of Chelm) and 236,000 lay members have during the last few months gone over, and only 23 parishes, with 23 priests and 17,000 lay members, remain true to their old faith. Some priests have emigrated to Galicia.

—It is stated that the Channel Islands, Guernsey and Jersey, form the only French-speaking country in the world in which the Sabbath is really observed, and that is due chiefly to Methodism. In Guernsey the Methodists have seventeen chapels, twelve of which are exclusively French; it is supposed that their congregations comprise fully one-fourth of the inhabitants. From these islands Methodism was introduced into France.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union sent out last year seventeen missionaries, men and women, to Assam, Burmah, the Teloogoos and China. The committee report, in the Asiatic missions, 135 missionaries, 547 native preachers, 395 churches and 24,178 members; in Europe and Africa, 139 missionaries, 973 native preachers, 346 churches and 31,389 members. The missions in Germany, Sweden, France and Africa are conducted entirely by native agencies.

—The Turkish Mission Aid Society of England has resolved to undertake to raise $25,000 gold for the endowment of a professorship in the medical department of the Central Turkey College. Of this sum $5,000 has already been given and placed at interest in London. Thus far the paid-up contributions of English friends to the college amount to $20,475. On December 3, 1874, the people of Aintab paid to the board of managers the last installment of the sum which they had pledged to the college; this was 56,564 piasters (about $2,500) in gold and silver, making 160,000 piasters or $7,048 in all given by them.

—The English Baptist Missionary Society carries on its work in India (Bengal, Northwest Provinces, Western India and Ceylon,) China (Shantuug Province,) Africa (Camaruns River,) West Indies (Jamaica, Bahama Islands, Hayti and Trinidad,) Brittany, Norway and Rome. The eighty-third annual report has an unusually cheering tone. Revivals have occurred in various parts of the mission-field and the accessions by baptism have been 3,546—very nearly twice the number of the previous year. In Bengal, which is the chief seat of the society's labors, there has been a marked breaking up of the stagnation so much complained of formerly. The visit of Rev. Dr. Somerville, of the Scotch Free Church, to Calcutta and many of the larger cities of Northern India has greatly quickened the religious interest already existing, and has produced numerous accessions of Europeans and Eurasians to the churches. As the habits of Europeans are closely criticised by the natives, and their vices diligently imitated, these conversions cannot help producing important results among the Hindoos. "It is the opinion of many persons," says the report, "that the greatest of all obstacles at present existing to the spread of the gospel in India is the reckless life, the depravity and the skepticism of no inconsiderable portion of the Europeans residing in the land." The native churches around Calcutta, in Jessore and the Backergunge have been revived, much zeal in prayer has been shown, and numerous accessions have taken place. In Santhalistan the Norwegian missionaries are meeting with wonderful success. During the past year 1,600 Santhals were baptized. The converts built their own simple churches, and the whole body of disciples, old and young, aid by their personal efforts the propagation of the gospel. It is gratifying to learn that even so hard-trodden a field as Delhi and its neighborhood is yielding to the gospel plowshare, as is shown by the usually large and interested audience gathered around the missionaries and their assistants. The work of the society in Europe is chiefly marked by the deep interest in the preaching of the Baptist missionaries in Brittany. The income for 1874-75 was slightly exceeded by the outlay, and amounted to $201,178. The collections for the past two years have indicated a steady growth in the missionary spirit among the Baptist churches of England, and have supported a considerable enlargement of the work of the association.

Our Young People.

THE CAPTAIN AND HIS CHILD.

BY JAMES T. FIELDS.

We were crowded in the cabin,
Not a soul would dare to sleep;
It was midnight on the waters,
And a storm was on the deep.

'Tis a fearful thing in winter
To be shattered by the blast,
And to hear the rattling trumpet
Thunder: "Cut away the mast!"

So we shuddered there in silence—
For the stoutest held his breath—
While the hungry sea was roaring,
And the breakers talked with death.

And as thus we sat in darkness,
Each one busy with his prayers,
"We are lost!" the captain shouted,
And he staggered down the stairs.

But his little daughter whispered,
As she took his icy hand:
"Is not God upon the water,
Just the same as on the land?"

Then he kissed the little maiden,
And he spoke in better cheer;
And we anchored safe in harbor
When the morn was shining clear.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see that you have been so kind as to give the little children a corner in your paper. This is the first time that I have written to you, and now I want to tell you that I'm quite anxious to hear the story of "Barney and the boys' nest." We have a great many little chickens this season, and I wish you lived near enough for me to bake you a large chicken pie, as I have often heard that all preachers are very fond of chickens. But as you live so far you must take the will for the deed from LITTLE FANNIE MOORE.

P. S.—Mr. Editor, I really don't know whether little girls and boys write to you or not. May be you write them yourself, because they won't write. Fannie Moore is not all of my name. I'm afraid to sign my entire name for fear of being laughed at. I'll tell you, but you must not tell anybody that my name is FANNIE MOORE——."

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are also anxious about the boys' nest. May know more about it after awhile. Mention of the chicken pie makes us hungry. Many thanks to Fannie for her good will. City preachers, however, don't know much about chickens. Our little friends write their own letters. We will not give Fannie's whole name, as she wishes it to be unknown.)

NEAR TUSKEGEE, ALA., July 2, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Will you accept this letter from a little girl seven years old the first day of the year?—having been a New Year gift. My parents live in Tuskegee, but I stay more than half the time with my uncle and auntie, near by in the country. My auntie has no children, and she claims me as her little girl. She taught me to read. When I was five years old I had gone through my first reader. She is now teaching me at home. I am studying reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic and geography.

Ever since auntie has been taking your paper I have been reading your pretty little stories in the Child's Corner. We do not know how we would spend our lonely hours in the country were it not for your paper. Auntie says she has taken several of the Advocates, and she likes yours best.

Mr. Editor, we live near a camp ground, and tented last year. I never saw so many people before. We would like so much for you to attend our camp meeting this year. Can't you come? Our good and much-loved pastor, Mr. Mangum, from Tuskegee, was there all the time last year. We hope he will tent again this year. The people love to hear him preach so much. Auntie says she heard some say they had rather hear him than to hear a Bishop.

I like Grandpa Goodale's stories very much. I do not like Tom's very much; he uses too many big words for me. I am rather like Charlie: "It's all 'tuff."

Your little friend,

JANIE BREWER.

Spurgeon's Experience.

A WORD TO THE BOYS.

BY THE REV. CHARLES H. SPURGEON.

When I was just fifteen I believed in the Lord Jesus, and joined the church of Christ; and nothing on earth would please me more than to hear that those I am writing to had been led to do the same. It is twenty-five years ago now, and I have never been sorry for what I then did; no, not even once. I have had plenty of time to think it over, and many temptations to try some other course; and if I had found out that I had been deceived, or had made a gross blunder, I would have made a change before now, and would do my best to prevent others from falling into the same delusion. I tell you, boys, the day I gave myself up to the Lord Jesus, to be his servant, was the very best day of my life. Then I began to be safe and to be happy; then I found out the secret of living, and had a worthy object of my life's exertions, and an unfailing comfort for life's troubles. Because I would wish every boy who reads these lines to have a bright eye, a light tread, a joyful heart and overflowing spirit, I therefore plead with him to consider whether he will not follow my example, for I speak from experience, and know what I say.

When we are on the side of Jesus, and, having believed in him, are cleansed and forgiven, then our pursuit of joy will be successful; but till then we shall labor in vain, and spend our strength for naught. It is of no use digging for coal where the geological strata show that there cannot be any; and equally useless is it to try after happiness where God's word, and the experience of those who have gone before, assure us that happiness cannot be found. But then it is all the more needful that we should seek it where it can be had, and give ourselves at once to the search. He who believes in the Lord Jesus is blessed indeed.

What hinders you from so believing? Boys, why should you not, while yet you are boys, believe in the Lord Jesus unto salvation? May the Spirit of God lead you to do so!

We are looking to you, boys, for our future teachers, deacons, elders and ministers. As a general rule, I find that the best working Christians were converted when they were young. A tree which has been long planted is the more likely to bring forth much fruit. Our great Captain has found some of his bravest marshals among those soldiers who began as drummer-boys in the army. It is not possible to begin serving the Lord too soon; if we would be eminently useful, the earliest moment is, upon all accounts, the best. To whom are we to look for successors to ourselves and your fathers but to the uprising race of our sons? The grand old banner of the gospel has been carried by your sires unto this day; will you not uphold it as they have done? Soon must we pass away, for our hair is turning white; it will be our greatest joy if we shall know that our sons will take care that the Lord's work goes on. It will make our hearts leap within us if we see you enlisted in the army of the bleeding Savior; but if you prove false to your fathers' God, it were better for you and for us that you had never been born.

Do not imagine that you cannot now be Christians; the gifts of our heavenly Father's love are not reserved for a certain age; boys may be saved, boys may be workers for Jesus, boys may bring great glory to God. Hence it is that just now, at this particular turning-point in your lives, we are anxious to see you resolute for the right way. May the Holy Spirit incline you to resolve to be the Lord's. Others may despise your conscientious choice, and make mirth of your holy carefulness, but what matters it? Some of us have been laughed at for these twenty years, and are none the worse for it; we have had all manner of evil spoken falsely of us for Christ's name's sake, but we are the happier for it. Oh, boys, if you are renewed in heart, and become for life and death the Redeemer's, none can really harm you; all must be right with him who is right with God.

Hold on, then, to the Sabbath school; and when you cease to be taught become teachers. Hold on by the Sabbath services and all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and say, like Ruth to Naomi: "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."—Times of Blessing.

HE COULD BE TRUSTED.—Alfred was missing one night about sunset. Mother was getting anxious, for she always wished him to be home early. A neighbor, coming in, said a number of boys had gone to the river to swim, and he thought it likely Alfred was with them.

"No," said his mother, "he promised me he would never go there without my leave, and he always keeps his word."

But seven o'clock came, then eight, and mother was still listening for Alfred's step; but it was half-past eight before his shout and whistle were heard when he ran in at the gate.

"Confess now," said the neighbor, "that you have been to the river with other boys, and so kept away till late."

How the boy's eyes flashed, and the crimson mounted to his cheeks!

"No, sir; I promised my mother that I would never go there without her leave, and do you think I would tell a falsehood? I helped James to find the cows that had strayed in the woods, and didn't think I should stay so late."

"I think," said the neighbor, turning to the mother, as he took his hat to go home, "there is a comfort in store for you by him. Such a boy as that will make a noble man."—Youth's Companion.

A CHILD'S CIVILITY.—When the Emperor of Germany was lately on a visit in a distant portion of his dominions he was welcomed by the school children of the village. After their speaker had made a speech for them he thanked them. Then, taking an orange from a plate, he asked:

"To what kingdom does this belong?"

"To the vegetable kingdom, sire," replied a little girl.

"And to what kingdom does this belong?"

"To the mineral kingdom, sire," replied the little girl.

"And to what kingdom do I belong, then?" asked the Emperor.

The little girl colored deeply, for she did not like to say "the animal kingdom," as he thought she would, lest his majesty should be offended, when a bright thought came, and she said, with radiant eyes:

"To God's kingdom, sire."

The Emperor was deeply moved. A tear stood in his eye. He placed his hands on the child's head, and said, most devoutly:

"Grant that I may be accounted worthy of that kingdom."

SPECTACULAR religion is what the Graphic calls the ecclesiastical parades and exhibitions of millinery, in which the Roman Catholic Church has of late been indulging.

Some Exceptions.

Mr. Whittle, the evangelist, has been successfully at work in Little Rock, Ark., lately. A. R. W., writing to the Western Methodist, rejoices in the good done, but is careful to qualify his commendations. He would guard against abuse of this evangelism in its relations to the pastoral work, and also against errors in doctrine and experience. Mr. Whittle's theology, we infer, is Calvinistic, and we suppose this appears in his way of stating doctrine and apprehending experience. He is bound to preach the gospel as he understands it, and we do not respect him the less because he is true to his convictions.

If we are correctly informed, Moody, Hammond, Earle, Smith, and nearly all the most noted evangelists of the day, are Calvinistic. Calvinistic Methodism, after the methods of Whitefield and Lady Huntingdon, seems to have been revived. There is no sectarian bigotry about these men, no purpose in their labors beyond the awakening and conversion of the people. Their oneness with all evangelical Christians in the great basal truths of the atonement, regeneration and assurance is manifest. They have a broad catholic spirit and a single eye. The theological system which is grounded into their convictions, and which underlies their presentation of the gospel, must of necessity crop out here and there.

To unite with them does not mean indorsement of their peculiar tenets. We expect them to be consistent and outspoken in what they hold, and our Arminian folk will be equally manly and candid in their course. Any hurtful leaven of erroneous doctrine—dead fly in the ointment of grace—will, we hope, be eliminated by the healthy spiritual instincts of our people. The strictures of our friend, A. R. W., are, however, both timely and wise, especially so far as they are addressed to his brother ministers. He says "our churches are cursed with an unconverted membership." Dr. Tyng says it is the same with the evangelical churches in New York. Perhaps it is a trouble everywhere. Let us guard the door of admission, and give no rest to these unconverted members until they are saved from sin. But to the extract from Dr. W.'s letter:

Mr. Whittle, the evangelist, accompanied by Mr. Francis, reached our city on last Tuesday morning, and commenced operations at half-past eight A. M., at the Presbyterian church, with a union prayer meeting, and a Bible meeting at half-past four P. M. Owing to college exercises, there was no public service till Wednesday night. Since then there has been, in addition to the morning and evening service, a public service every night at the Presbyterian church, and the large audience-room is filled to its utmost capacity; and there has certainly been awakened in our city a great and almost universal interest on the subject of religion. I have heard Mr. Whittle several times, and while I do not by any means adopt his theological view on imputed righteousness, faith and repentance, and more particularly do I object to his teaching as to what is genuine conversion, or the new birth, still I do most heartily admire his very great simplicity and earnestness. He is certainly consecrated to his work, and deeply in earnest in performing it, and the Master is honoring his servant. Mr. Francis is a fine singer. He sings the gospel as well as Mr. Whittle preaches it, and that is according to their views of it. Certainly good is done. Christ is preached, and herein I will rejoice, and do rejoice; but still I think there is very great danger that by overlooking the great doctrines of depravity, justification by faith, and a real spiritual regeneration, attested by the witness of the Spirit, much of this work will be evanescent, and be followed by a very fearful reaction. Again, I fear we are training our people to look to the extraordinary means and instrumentalities, instead of those wisely appointed by Christ, and which have been mighty, through God, to the pulling down of the strongholds of satan. I have no word against lay evangelism. Mr. Wesley used it himself to great advantage; but I do object to our ministers giving up all authority to an evangelist, as if there were some supernatural power connected with these men. Brother ministers, you can have a revival anywhere, in any town, in any city, where you will unite in simplicity and faith, relying on the inherent power of the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation. There is a Holy Ghost in the world. Unite your forces and seek his power, and don't rely on the power of artistic song and evangelism, but go to work as God's ministers. Doubt yourself till the power divine comes upon your heart; visit your people and talk it to them, and pray with them, till they have the power of faith and consecration; then move your forces forward on the enemy. We need well-drilled and well-disciplined troops. See here! cease catechising the penitents, to tell them they have accepted the Savior. Urge them to a personal knowledge of their acceptance of God through Christ, and of their certain conversion. Our churches are cursed with an unconverted membership. Here is my dread of evangelism, and of latter-day revivals and revivalists. Let no one suppose that I am in the least opposed to revivals. I have been engaged in them for nearly thirty years. I love them, I am not willing to live without them, but I want them prayed down out of heaven, and not "got up." I do not insist on either shouting or noise, but I expect both when sinners are cut to the heart, and souls are converted. O for a powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost on Little Rock!

The President's Whisky.

Our patriotic President went to the centennial celebration at Lexington and Concord. There the rebels first resisted, by arms, the excellent government of King George—the best government the sun ever shone upon—and inaugurated a long and bloody war. It was fitting that he who had put down one rebellion, and made so much out of it every way, should honor with his presence another which had proved a grand success. He must needs pass through Boston, and the State, in that now truly loyal but once most rebellious town, could not do less than give the President a sumptuous entertainment and banquet.

It seems that liquors and cigars were furnished on the occasion, and especially liquors. It is not reported that the President indulged in either. No loyal man or woman in Massachusetts believes that Mr. Grant drinks or smokes. The liquor and the cigars got in somehow, in a pro forma way, without the least regard to the well-known habits of the distinguished guest. "The day we celebrate" and the customs of 1775 may have been running in the heads of those who were appointed to cater to the President and his party. Certainly, in these days of patriotic fervor, the Yankee banditti had not so much as heard of total abstinence, and prohibitory laws were not dreamed of. Possibly the President, in view of the occasion, wished to get back into the atmosphere of Boston as it was a hundred years ago, and ventured this once to depart from his usually abstemious ways. These centennials are further apart even than Christmas by a hundred times, and why not "let joy be unconfined?" However we may fall to account for the rather strange circumstance, liquor and cigars were furnished at the aforesaid banquet in the town of Boston, the very head and hub of advanced civilization and high moral ideas, and one hundred years after that rebellious bushwhacking of the red coats about Lexington and Concord.

Now there is in the good old Commonwealth a State prohibitory law. Here was a gross inconsistency, the State violating its own statute in doing honor to the chief magistrate. The legislative committee, infringing a plain law, of course, waked up the temperance men, every man of whom probably voted for Grant as the embodiment of sobriety, and may do so again if he concludes to come out for a third term. The State Temperance Alliance holds a pow-wow over the matter. The committee shield themselves under the order given in the usual way for the "best entertainment and the best banquet." It was not the fault of the legislative committee, who are all doubtless staunch temperance men when votes are wanted, but the stupid blunder of those who interpreted their order. Those who are acquainted with the President's temperate habits, and his sacred regard and reverent respect for the rights and laws of the States, will never suspect him of having countenanced this violation of a local statute.

Somebody did it, however—somebody was to blame; the feelings of the temperance men were very justly aroused, and they very properly protest against this grave immorality. Next time the President visits Boston we suppose that "the best possible" will be provided, without either liquor or cigars. Why the Chicago Times should head the action of the Temperance Alliance "The President's Whisky," we cannot tell. What had the President to do with it? Why connect the name of our chief magistrate with the vile stuff which the State furnished? We give the item, however, as we find it, heading and all:

THE PRESIDENT'S WHISKY.

BOSTON, June 30.—The State Temperance Alliance to-day discussed the bills for wines and cigars furnished by the State to the President on his visit en route for Lexington and Concord. The committee say that they find no departure from the common and usual routine. The legislative committee gave the order in the usual way for the "best entertainment and the best banquet." The order was understood in the usual way, to the amount of $4,362 for the entertainment of guests, besides what was provided for the banquet, at which liquors were of course furnished. It does not, indeed, seem to have occurred to any one that the "best possible entertainment" and the "best possible banquet" could be given without them. After discussing the moral question of the State supplying liquors to its guests while the prohibitory law was in force on paper, the report concludes: "This provision of liquors by the State demands our attention for two reasons: First, this public example of the State cannot fail to exert a potent adverse influence on every department of the moral work of the alliance; second, because the same want of respect for the laws which permitted the State government to patronize an illegal liquor traffic in this case is sure to show itself under any change of laws, and cannot fail of exerting a most disastrous influence on the interests of the Commonwealth." The report was adopted.—Chicago Times.

Salary Advanced.

The press dispatches inform us that Plymouth church has advanced Mr. Beecher's salary from $20,000 to $100,000. This is a very fair salary for a preacher of the gospel. Even twenty thousand would have kept the Brooklyn pastor from pressing want, but one hundred thousand will support him in some tolerable degree of comfort, and leave something to pay lawyers and to aid the destitute. "Verily there is a reward for the righteous," even in this world, and Mr. Beecher's last days promise to be gilded with the brightest rays of a golden sun. He has passed through the fiery furnace, but who shall say that he has not come forth as gold? No matter now what the world says, nor what the jury would not say, this hundred thousand will repay the sorrows of the past, and compensate the damage which his character has sustained.

Virtue in his case has proved to be something more than its own exceeding great reward. It pays to be pure and discreet, and to tread the rugged path of self-denial and personal sacrifice. It is only here and there that the sorely-afflicted come out of the conflict to be blessed as Beecher is. The most must be content to suffer in this life, and to be comfortable in the world to come. No such crown has ever been put upon suffering innocence, or mollified the wounds of martyrdom, as that which the pew-holders of Plymouth church have placed upon the brow of their saintly pastor. What a complacent vacation will be his this summer, with the trial over, the plaudits and worship of his people still sounding, and that hundred thousand passed to his credit! Can even an obstinate and unreasonable public opinion maintain itself against such an a fortiori as this?

Beecher has many attempted imitators in his way of preaching, much to the damage of the pulpit, but we trust none will be allured by his success to venture upon such devious and perilous paths as the recent trial has exposed. Such revelations of weakness and indiscretion, if not of crime, would have ruined almost any other Christian minister, and consigned him to infamy. Beecher could not be given up in any event. It would have been, as Gen. Butler declared, "a national calamity" to have convicted him. He was the pillar of too many financial interests, the representative of certain political and social ideas that must not be dishonored, and the center and life of a class that by his fall would have been left as planets without a sun. The Plymouth people may have thought that their pastor had erred somewhat, and that, if guilty, he had repented of his sin. His preaching had prepared them to deal leniently with their own faults and with his. Here was a chance for the application of the everlasting drivel about Christian manhood and the Christ life and true inwardness.

The advanced salary is to show to a doubting world how the Plymouth stockholders have regarded this scandal, and how completely they believe in the man. Whether they staked any money on the verdict we do not know, but, as no verdict could be obtained, this is their way of declaring to mankind what they think it ought to have been.

If the reported increase of salary be true, it will not help Mr. Beecher's reputation, however much it may add to his bank account. His former salary was extravagant and unparalleled, and enough. This advance is coincident with circumstances which will always make it a memorial of the dark shadow which for life must rest upon him. If the church has voted this advance the pastor will be wise to decline it.

The Genius of the Commonplace.

R. H. D., in Scribner, says with more wit than wisdom: "Choose any artist you know—the one with the kindliest nature and the finest perceptions—and ask him to give you his idea of the genius of the commonplace, and, my word for it, he paints you a middle-aged woman; the thing, he will say, proves itself. Here is a creature, jogging on leisurely at midday, in sight of all men, along a well-tramped road. The mists of dawn are far behind her—she has not yet reached the shadows of evening."

Yes, it is painfully true and glaringly evident that not only is Euphrosyne's hair growing dun-colored instead of golden, but a similar transformation is taking place within her brain. The fervid fancies which made real those divine phantasmagoria of youth have given place to the literal and unimpeachable teachings of experience.

Many a brown-eyed and dusky-haired knight have the years, with iconoclastic hand, tumbled from his pedestal, and turned his princely beauty into a marvel of inanity, at which she wonders and smiles. And even thus have they "materialized" every spirit which haunted the visions of her youth, till, upon entering the first uninviting luster of the fourth decade, all of fairy land has gone, and only tiresome matter-of-fact remains to be grappled with daily.

Therefore the rose color of cheek and lip has faded into yellow, and the pearl deepened into unsightly patches; it may be even—freckles!—so much has the physical been tinged by that awkward artist, Time, who has marred the finer tintings of her youth; and the "creature who jogs along at noonday" finds the bloom faded and the perfumes exhaled by the heated air. Usually she realizes it with a pang at first—it is dreary to part with anything lovely for aye. But, accepting the inevitable, if she is wise, and divested of those meretricious charms, along that dusty highway she may still make enticing shadows and lovely perspectives, whose tender wooing stillness and softened lights will reflect on her "muddy complexion" hues as beautiful as the rainbow; for are not these tender graces born of tears? And, after all, he who sees only this unlovely change is, to say the least, a careless and untrustworthy observer; he has not found the hidden soul of the departed loveliness shining out, as it may, in far greater beauty than when its impatient wings were fluttering over untried bewilderments of space and expectation.

This merciful genius of the commonplace need not be content with simply growing homely and stale, good only for receipts and bread-making, though this would seem her chief duty, as it appears to be her salient point.

Where is the maiden who can bring more of the deepest poetry of life with her radiant presence than the quiet home-mother disseminates through the gentle ministries which are so "commonplace?" Where is the artist whose heaven-taught pencil can limn forth colors so fair and glowing as the sweet pictures of earnest life which she inspires with soul and warmth, which she, indeed, creates in the atmosphere of home, that clear, pure realm where truth and nature show ever freshest and loveliest? What sweet singer can supply more of music than softly chimes through that faithful woman's soul, while, amid the monotonous, harassing round of petty cares and worries, must cheer herself and others with those clear tones the angel of patience teaches through the weary day? Who should be so full of all beauty and purity and truth as she to whom God has intrusted his "fair young souls" for moulding and development, whose fruits are unto eternal life or death? Where is the lever who glows with such worthy devotion as does he who, amid the wrecks of a beauty which in its early freshness won his love, has found one who proves as gold, having been tried in the fires of toil and affliction—the fairest among ten thousand to him? Heaven stoops to watch such holy human love, and in its perfection it is won only by the "middle-aged woman." Well may she glory in a loss which brings her such compensation; well may she rejoice in this fruitage of years and of sorrows. Nor is her life devoid of the most beautiful inspiration to deeds and alms divine;

> "For Christ, who to the Virgin
> Our motherhood has blessed,
> Is near to every woman
> With a baby on her breast."

And this inspiration is breathed into her common toil, until it "makes drudgery divine." Who can thus, out of the material of a daily routine—inevitably monotonous and cramping—evolve a breath of heaven cannot have lost all the elements of the poetic or heroic. Amid the busy bustle of this midday life comes the sweet tumult of the children's voices. "Mother, mother," is called everywhere, and is needed everywhere. Who must be so patient or so wise as she? And what later love comes to the heart of her son more lofty or serene than that for the lonely, toilsome mother, who has lost the halo of her beautiful youth, retaining only the "commonplace," which is as the aureole of an angel to him, so has she spiritualized and sanctified it.

Oh! thus it should be, that as the soft, pearly bloom is brushed away by the rude touches of life, within a richness and perfecting of all sweetness should be growing in its place. And when, mayhap, the distaff is laid aside, and the tolling one is called to quiet rest before the evening, no brighter crown awaits than hers who has borne the heat and burden of the day, faithful and patient to the end.

A Plan.

The plan mentioned in the extract below, from the Richmond Christian Advocate, is one which we have adopted to some extent in this city, and which we had thought of recommending to our preachers. Many would find it easy to pay five cents a week for the paper, receiving the paper and paying for it weekly at the church. In stations the plan is perfectly feasible if the pastors will take an interest in it, and give their personal attention to its execution. The object, of course, is not to supersede sending the paper by mail to regular subscribers, but to accommodate those who may not find it convenient to pay the entire subscription price at once. Nearly every member of the church, however poor, can pay five cents a week. The editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate says:

WHO WILL FOLLOW?—Rev. J. H. Crown, of Second Street, and Bro. E. R. Hunter, of Central church, Portsmouth, have adopted a plan by which they circulate every week sixty copies of the Advocate in the two churches in addition to the regular subscribers. To Second Street we send thirty, to Central thirty, and the list is growing. The plan is a simple one, and can be worked in every church. We send these brethren so many papers per week at a given rate, and they circulate them and collect weekly for us. This makes the payment easy. Bro. Hunter says they will reach one hundred copies in Central, and that they propose to furnish the paper to every member not able to take it. Who will try this plan? Write for specimen copies and terms, and make a trial.

THE Shubuta Times, Mississippi, contains the following notice of the death of a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference:

Rev. William McCormick died, at his residence in Jasper county, on Thursday evening, June 24, of some disease or diseases that have afflicted him for many years. Notwithstanding so many years of suffering, he had lived to be upward of eighty years old.

The deceased was a good man—a devoted Christian. He joined the church in the prime of life, and had been for many years a faithful follower of his Master. He was one of the old settlers, was industrious, was slow to go in debt, just to his creditors, and earned a good living. His life was most exemplary indeed—was a good husband, kind father, good neighbor, excellent citizen and pious member of the church.

Doubtless his death was tranquil, as his life had been, and passed over the cold stream of Jordan to the joy awaiting him beyond. We imagine to him Death was no unfriendly visitor, but came as a messenger of love to relieve him of the many pains and troubles of body that had pressed upon his old age. His friends will miss him, will mourn his death, but can rejoice in the welcome that he receives in the next life—the life of heaven.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

POTTER'S COMPLETE BIBLE ENCYCLOPEDIA. A Universal Treasury of Religious Knowledge. Edited by Rev. William Blackwood, D. D., LL. D. With valuable contributions by eminent divines of the several evangelical denominations. With more than 3,000 choice illustrative engravings. In two volumes.

We have received the eight parts (43-50) which conclude this splendid work. We have heretofore spoken in the highest terms of this publication as the earlier numbers reached us, and now, with the entire work before us, we are more than ever impressed with its great value. It is indeed a universal treasury of religious knowledge, not only in what is strictly biblical, but in theology, church history, biography and ecclesiastical nomenclature. The pictorial illustrations are numerous and well executed, presenting a profusion of artistic beauty beyond any work with which we are acquainted. It is supplied with a copious index of the articles, and a list of the illustrations, which adds much to its value for reference.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the announcement of Vanderbilt University for 1875-76. The organization is now about completed, the professors are nearly all elected, and the course of study of the several departments and schools determined. The university is organized with four distinct departments, as follows: 1. The Department of Philosophy, Science and Literature. 2. The Biblical Department. 3. The Law Department. 4. The Medical Department. The Department of Philosophy, Science and Literature embraces the following schools: School of Latin Language and Literature, School of Greek Language and Literature, School of Modern Languages and English, School of Philosophy and Criticism, School of Mathematics, School of Physics and Astronomy, School of Chemistry, School of Natural History and Geology. The Biblical Department embraces: 1. Systematic Theology. 2. Exegetical Theology. 3. Practical Theology. 4. Ecclesiastical History and Introduction to the Bible. The session of the university opens on the first Monday in October, and continues, without interruption, for nine months. For announcement and all information desired address Rev. Robert A. Young, D. D., secretary of the board of trustees.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Annual Report of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, June 1, 1875. This is a complete exhibition of our mission work, and should be carefully read by our preachers and people. The materials of many good missionary speeches are in it. Pastors, in presenting the cause of missions to their congregations, will do well to study the report as a means of preparation. It is full of facts, but they are not dry to those who love the kingdom of Christ.

THE National Protestant is the title of a new journal to be issued monthly in New York. The first number is an excellent one. It promises to be a consistent anti-Roman Catholic journal. Price, $1 a year. William H. Van Nortwick, managing editor.

WE ARE INDEBTED to the publishers, A. S. Barnes & Co., for a copy of an address before the Association of the Graduates of the United States Military Academy, by Charles Davies, on the Centennial anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill, June 17, 1875.

THE Co-Operative News is the title of a new weekly paper published in New Orleans by the Co-Operative News Publishing Company, and edited by J. B. Robertson. It is devoted to the Patrons of Husbandry. The first number was issued June 24.

THE catalogue of Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va., is a model of neatness and typographical finish. We are glad that this excellent institution enjoys such prosperity. Our friend, President Jones, deserves success, and commands it.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for July has: May in June, The Tares of the Black Mountains, Camp-Fire Lyrics, Eight Hundred Miles on an Ambulance, A Night in a Swiss Pension, and other articles. The first article is handsomely illustrated.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogue of the Texas University, Georgetown, Texas, Rev. F. A. Mood, D. D., president. We are glad to see that there are provisions made for instruction in Spanish and German in this institution.

THE Southern Cultivator for July has been received. It is filled with information suited to the wants of our Southern farmers and planters. W. L. Jones, editor and proprietor, Athens, Ga.

THE College Pen, conducted by the members of Neophagen College, Gallatin, Tenn., is a monthly magazine filled with articles of interest. We have received the June number.

A Timely Protest.

The Protestant ministers of Baltimore held a meeting at the large hall of the Methodist Book-Rooms on Thursday, the twenty-seventh ult. It was in accordance with a call issued under the auspices of some members of the preachers' meeting, and was to express ministerial sentiment in relation to donations of public money to sectarian denominations, to aid them in the maintenance of sectarian institutions. At the meeting there were not only over forty clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) but many of the most influential and able ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopalian and other denominations—about 150 in all. One branch of the City Council had made appropriations, amounting to some $21,000, to various Roman Catholic institutions. The "protest" against this sectarian appropriation of the peoples' money was unanimously adopted and sent to the City Council.

This movement on the part of our Protestant brethren of Baltimore is of the greatest importance. We have for some time past feared that our friends were not sufficiently aware of the perils of the hour. This is the great question of the century. It is so regarded in Europe, especially in Germany and England, and it equally concerns the people of the United States. That sterling paper, the New York Observer, has recently published an account of the operations of the Jesuits, showing that the peculiar function of the order was to counteract the spirit of Protestantism.

All attempts in the last 340 years to divert the order from its original purpose have been thwarted, and to this hour its energies are concentrated upon the two departments—"missions and education." They have sixteen colleges distinctively their own in the United States, and their emissaries are in chairs of instruction in many institutions not suspected of being under their control. The number of actual sworn members of the order in the United States and Canada in 1874 was 1,062, of whom 251 were in the missions of New York and Canada. Notwithstanding the suppression of the order by the infallible Pope of Rome in 1773, in all the States of Christendom, they have been and are now the most active, powerful and successful adherents of the papal government—the life-blood and the muscle of the Roman Church.

Prof. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph, was in Rome in 1830, and there and then was convinced, by his intercourse with a Roman Catholic dignitary and others, that a conspiracy was in existence, even at that early date, to extinguish the free government of the United States, and to bring the people under papal and despotic rule.

In Paris, on his way to his own country, Prof. Morse was on confidential and very intimate terms with Lafayette, to whom he communicated his knowledge of the intrigues on foot. He found that Lafayette was apprehensive of the same thing, and the great friend of American independence freely expressed to Prof. Morse the sentiment which he afterward put into epigrammatic words: "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy." The publication of this testimony of Prof. Morse, and of this opinion of Lafayette, produced an excitement in this country and a discussion that are well remembered by the survivors of the last generation, though there are many now on the stage who were too young at that time to remember the circumstances.

If the conspiracy really had an organized existence, it still lives. If it had no other shape than the general intent and purpose of the order to subdue all the world to the feet of the papacy, it is now as active, real and progressive as it was forty-five years ago; and it has not been like in the last half century, as we have the best reason to know.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

Not a Lucrative Business.

If any think that publishing a religious paper is a money-making business, they will do well to glance at the following paragraphs, cut from one week's exchanges:

The actual amount paid for editorial labor on the Central Christian Advocate, of St. Louis, last year, including editorial salaries, amounts paid for contributions, and all editorial office expenses, was less than $6,000. We only wonder that they make so good a paper. The Independent has found itself able to expend that amount in a single month.—Independent.

It is claimed by the Northern Christian Advocate, published at Syracuse, N. Y., that it, the New York Christian Advocate and the Western Christian Advocate are the only papers of the Church North that are paying expenses. The New York Advocate has a subscription of fifty thousand, and yet its profits amount only to $10,000 per annum.

The New York Christian Advocate says: "The Western Book Concern carries on four weekly papers, at the same number of cities, each with its working force of editors and publishing agents, whose aggregate circulation is only about fifty thousand, and whose expenses as a whole amount to more than their income. It further appears that in 1874 the united circulations of these four papers were some sixteen thousand less than those of three of them ten years before. Now, in view of these facts, it seems to us that the traditional 'policy' of the church in respect to these papers ought not to be perpetuated—that in some way there should be a more economical management of their affairs."

A correspondent of a Boston paper says: "There is some fun in running a religious newspaper, but it costs something. There was a prospect at one time that every minister in New York would have his own organ. But these local papers seem to be breaking up faster than they were formed. Fulton has stepped out of his paper; Hepworth has left his; young Tyng has left the editorial chair, and the old-line denominational papers will soon have it all to themselves. A minister might as well try to have a private railroad as a private newspaper."

SOME Catholic abbots have queer ideas of honesty. The Swiss government has recently suppressed the Convent of "Mariastein;" but the good prior, on taking his leave, thought he would carry with him some pleasant souvenirs of his life there, and so he took the abbot's cross and the whole series of the archives of the convent. The government objects to this little pleasantry, and announces that unless the stolen goods are returned the pensions of the monks will be cut off.

Publisher's Department.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and ran more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La.	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1874—From Canton, Miss.	2 00
June 18, 1875—From W. H. Spencer	2 50
June 11, 1875—From Selma, Ala.	3 00
Nov. 21, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Nov. 27, 1874—From John Walker, New Iberia	4 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Laney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 26, 1875—From C. C. Manning	6 10
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La.	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss.	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters to the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, will leave, July 1, for a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, VA.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of this popular seminary for the education of young ladies. It is located in the city of Staunton, in the center of the far-famed Shenandoah valley, in one of the healthiest of climates. It presents attractions unsurpassed in the South. It is conducted by over twenty able and accomplished teachers and officers. Its buildings are home-like and elegant, grounds attractive, scenery grand.

We learn that the last session of this school was attended by pupils from seventeen different States. One of the laudable aims of this school will be, we are informed, to require its pupils to practice economy, especially in dress. To this end a simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary bills are allowed, and the expenses of parents and guardians are to be kept within the lowest possible amount. With these advantages we are not surprised that this popular institution draws its patronage from Maryland and Pennsylvania to Texas. It is indorsed by a host of distinguished friends and patrons throughout the bounds of the South, and for health and comfort, sound learning and graceful accomplishments, it deservedly ranks among the very best of our schools. See advertisement.

TRINITY COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.—The fall session of the above institution opens September 2, 1875. Rev. B. Craven, D. D., is a thorough and most successful educator, fully alive, wide awake, progressive, dignified, methodical and competent, and loved and honored by the students. Happy students and thrice happy community to be able to boast of such an institution, and such a man at the head of it. See advertisement.

THE GRAND EXCURSION to Ocean Springs and Seashore camp meeting, from Montgomery, Ala., is advertised on the fifth page of our present issue, to which we invite the special attention of our readers in those portions of Alabama convenient to avail themselves of the advantages offered for the trip. Those who take the excursion will be well paid for the cost and time, we have no doubt.

FARMVILLE COLLEGE.—This Institution, located in Prince Edward county, Va., on the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad, midway between Petersburg and Lynchburg, is under the management of Rev. Paul Whitehead, and to those who know Bro. Whitehead there is no necessity of saying more. He is not the man to be in charge of anything second-rate. See advertisement.

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE, TENNESSEE.—To parents and guardians who are about to select a school for their daughters and wards we propound a few earnest questions:

1. Do you wish for a school whose organization is thorough, and whose course of study is extensive and solid; or will you be satisfied with what is imperfect and fictitious?

2. Do you desire a school whose merit has been proved by long years of success, and whose solid investments in fixed property and general equipments are a pledge to the public of permanency: or will you be satisfied with flashy and ephemeral pretension?

3. Will you choose a school that is provided with costly apparatus, cabinets, maps, charts, globes, and all the appliances needed to explain the more difficult points of science; or will you be satisfied with one that has none of these?

4. Do you want a school whose teachers, by long experience and fidelity, have won high reputation; or will you be satisfied with pedantry and inexperience, making their bid for patronage often on the sole ground of cheapness? Such schools are generally cheap indeed.

5. And are you seeking a school where the morals and manners of the pupils receive constant attention, and where they are trained up with those proper habits and just views of life which tend to make them the pride of parents and the ornaments of society; or are you indifferent to these things?

In short, if you want a really good school, of moderate charges, and where the benefits received are equal to the money given, we can safely recommend the State Female College.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.—The above noble institution, located in Washington county, Va., on the Virginia and Tennessee air-line railroad, is one well deserving patronage; indeed it is an institution of which the whole church should feel proud, for such institutions are the common property of the whole church and country. The superior mental culture received in such an institution is a legacy bestowed upon the generation. Long may Dr. Wiley live to preside over the fortunate classes collected in its halls and lecture-rooms. See advertisement in another column.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.—The city of Huntsville is a gem on the mountainside—beautiful to behold at a distance, and does not lose its attractions on near approach. It would be difficult to find a more suitable place for the location of an institution of learning. With the enterprise and indomitable energy of such a president as Rev. George W. F. Price the college ought to have such a patronage as its fine faculty and unsurpassed location deserve. See advertisement.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE FEMALE COLLEGE.—Those who read our last week's issue had a full description of the commencement exercises and the doings of the above-named institution. We were at Tuskegee during the war, and could say much about the hospitality and social refinement of the place if we had space. See advertisement.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The farmer lives in his own house. The use of the house, which he does not pay for, is as much a part of his income as the money which a salaried man pays for rent is of his, and should be counted as such in an estimate of the profits of the farm. All things produced on the farm and consumed on the farmer's table, including the vegetables from the garden, the eggs and milk used in cooking, are as much a part of his income as the money paid for such things out of his salary is of the salaried man. If a farmer gives his wife and children a pleasant ride to town, using his own horses and wagon, the value of their use is part of his income from his farm, as truly as the money the other man pays out of his salary for carriage hire is of his. The correct rule for estimating the income from a farm is substantially this: Give credit for every article produced, used or expended in any way whatever, no matter how small in value, as well as for cash received for products sold, and for increase in the value of farm property, and charge against the farm for interest on capital invested, and for all expenditures. The farmer that will do this from year to year will not so much feel like complaining of the unprofitableness of farming as compared with other pursuits. The fact is that not one in a hundred farmers takes into consideration the luxury and comforts of fresh eggs, butter, milk, fruits, etc., that they would have to pay high prices for if they lived in towns, or do without them. Farmer's Vindicator.

CHILDREN'S GARDENS.—I wish every mother in the country knew the great satisfaction to be derived from the little plots of land the children cultivate as their own. No matter how small, it has a peculiar charm, and its mixed and incongruous plantings often yield astonishing results. No radishes so crisp as those your little son will lay beside your plate, the reward for his toil and care. No flowers so beautiful as those your loving daughter brings in some bright spring morning, nurtured and tended by her own hands. The earliest hepatica of the woods grows serenely in the shadow of "May's tree," and wild violets flourish in Annie's gentle care.

In our home each child has a plot of ground and an apple-tree, the fruit of which, always fair and beautiful, is shared generously, and the surplus sold for pocket money. Sometimes an early melon finds its way to our table from the garden of one of our industrious boys, and is praised and appreciated as a reward for his labor. Little two-year-old has a garden too, and while we try to teach him not to pull up the happy family of flowers and vegetables that thrive there, we delight in his glad murmur as he roams like a true Bohemian in the summer sunshine, saying, "My gardee, my gardee," and, taking a whole potato from the cellar, where his restless feet often wander, he plants it just deep enough for the hens to pick out, and, nothing daunted, sows a handful of peas over it. But as he grows older he will learn that this is not the road to success, and try to copy the care and vigilance displayed by his elders. Even "Baby Hope" has a little circle filled with sweet wild flowers, brought from the woods this spring, "to be ready when she can gather them," the children say; and our eager young botanists are ever ready to search for a new flower to transplant into "Hope's garden." By such innocent pleasures home is made happy and beautified.—Rural New Yorker.

CONNECTICUT DAIRY DISCUSSIONS. The general conclusions derived from Dr. Sturtevant's lecture before the Connecticut State Board of Agriculture may be summarized as follows:

The butter product is largely governed by food.

The structural limit to the butter capacity of each cow.

When the cow is fed to this limit, increased food cannot increase the production.

The superior cow has this structural limit at a distance from ordinary food, and is more ready to respond to stimuli than the inferior cow.

The superior cow is seldom fed up to her limit, while the inferior cow may be fed beyond her limit.

The character of the food has some influence on the character of the butter, but breed has more.

There is no constant relation between the butter product and the cheese product.

The casein is constant, and does not respond to an increase of food.

The casein is constant, without regard to season.

Increase in the quantity of milk is followed by an increase in the total amount of casein.

Insufficient food checks the production of butter, and tends to decrease the casein and to the substitution of albumen.

It is not often that we find so many truths in so small space as in the above. Dr. Sturtevant has given a great deal of attention to the subject, and understands what he is talking about.

COLD POWDER.—We have long been in the habit of using what we call a cold powder, which we have found of great value in breaking up colds when taken in time, and in modifying their force when taken late.

The prescription is as follows: Camphor, five parts. Dissolve in ether to the consistence of cream, then add carbonate of ammonia, four parts; opium powder, one part. Mix and keep in a tightly-corked bottle. The dose is, of course, regulated by the opium, and ranges between three and ten or fifteen grains. We have been accustomed to prescribe it for our friends by the finger-nail full, or as much as one can put on the finger-nail. This powder may be taken in a little water just before retiring, by preference, or at any hour of the day, whenever there is a suspicion of having caught cold. If need be, a moderate dose may be taken several days in succession.

The advantages of this powder are very great:

1. The taste is agreeable, or, at least, is not disagreeable. Even the bitterness of the opium is mostly neutralized by the camphor and ammonia. No child objects to this powder.

2. It is singularly and inexplicably efficacious. We believe it to be more efficient than Dover's Powder, and incomparably more agreeable. In some cases it produces a gentle perspiration; in others, this special effect is not observed. It is so easy to take, and so harmless in small doses, that it is well and safe to take it whenever we become badly chilled.—Archives of Electrology and Neuralgia.

OATMEAL AS FOOD.—Cassell's Magazine says of oatmeal: "We have called it the food for bone as well as brain, muscle as well as mind. To the laboring or artisan class it commends itself as an article of diet on account of its cheapness, the readiness and economy with which it can be cooked; and, while it is easily digested, it contains, as we have seen, a larger proportion than wheaten bread of the elements that go to form bone and muscle. The best Scotch oatmeal costs two pence a pound, and this contains far more true nourishment, in the opinion of some medical men, than the same weight of Liebig's Extract. It commends itself to literary men, and all workers who earn their bread by the sweat of their brains. There are, as we happen to know, several well-known authors who, though born and bred this side the Tweed, nevertheless swear by oatmeal porridge as a brain-inspiring compound. Then, as to its palatableness, we ourselves have long held the belief that not only is porridge rich in nutritive matter, but, when nicely cooked and eaten with new milk, is simply delicious—a dainty dish—fit, indeed, to set before any king."

TEN RULES FOR FARMERS.—1. Take good papers and read them.

2. Keep an account of farm operations.

3. Do not leave implements scattered over the farm, exposed to snow, rain and heat.

4. Repair tools and buildings at a proper time, and do not suffer subsequent three-fold expenditure of time and money.

5. Use money judiciously, and do not attend auction sales to purchase all kinds of trumpery because it is cheap.

6. See that fences are well repaired, and cattle not grazing in the meadows or grain-fields or orchards.

7. Do not refuse to make correct experiments, in a small way, of many new things.

8. Plant fruit-trees well, care for them, and of course get good crops.

9. Practice economy by giving stock shelter during the winter; also good food, taking out all that is unsound, half-rotten or moldy.

10. Do no keep tribes of cats and snarling dogs around the premises, who eat more in a month than they are worth in a lifetime.

MAKING LIMBURGER CHEESE.—The preliminary steps in the manufacture of Limburger cheese are similar to those employed with ordinary cheese, except that the curd is taken up in a moister state, more whey being permitted to remain, and the mass is heated to a different degree of temperature, thus preserving all the richness which otherwise would be lost. It is then taken from the vat and put in perforated molds five inches square by seven inches in depth, which are placed on the draining-table, where it is allowed to remain for a short time. It is then taken into the cheese cellar below ground and put on the pressing-tables, where it remains about twenty-four hours before it goes to the salting-table. After four or five days it is ready for the shelves, where it is placed in tiers, and changed and rubbed daily for about four to six weeks before it is packed. The packing process is done by rolling it in heavy paper and covering it with tin foil when it is ready for market.—Saginaw (Michigan) Exchange.

SWAMP MUCK.—An inquirer of the Canada Farmer having asked the effect of applying this substance alone to land, the editor gives the following as his estimate of its value:

"Ordinary swamp muck is largely composed of decayed vegetable matter, and in its dry and pulverized state it is almost identical with the leaf-mold so highly prized by horticulturists. Its absorbing qualities, when dry, are very great—hence its value in the manure heap—while its direct fertilizing action, even when used alone and in its natural state, has, by repeated experiments, been placed beyond all doubt. One of the finest crops of wheat and the best crop of onions we ever witnessed was the result of exactly such an application as that described by our correspondent, and we have no hesitation whatever in advising such of the readers of the Farmer as have this really valuable article on their farms to 'go and do likewise.'"

CRANBERRY ROLL.—Stew a quart of cranberries in sufficient water to keep them from burning. Make very sweet; strain and cool. Make a paste, and when the cranberries are cold spread it on the paste about an inch thick. Roll it; tie it close in a cloth; boil two hours and serve with a sweet sauce.

THE fact is, that in doing anything in this world worth doing, we must not stand shivering on the brink, thinking of the cold and danger, but jump in, and scramble through as well as we can.—Sydney Smith.

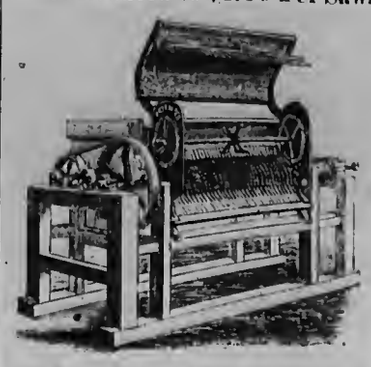
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $12 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a southern front of seven hundred feet, commercial education.

Scientific.

—It has been found that chloroform vapor will speedily extinguish the flame of petroleum vapor.

—The French Academy of Sciences, it is announced, is about to consider the propriety of adopting the meridian of Greenwich, in lieu of that of Paris.

—Prof. Marsh has returned from his expedition to the Bad Lands, near the Black Hills, bringing with him nearly two tons of fossil bones, most of them rare specimens. The collection goes toward enriching the museum of Yale College.

—A French chemist, M. Anthon, has found that chloride of calcium, added in small quantities to a sugar solution, decreases the yield of molasses; while if added in large quantities it entirely prevents the crystallization of sugar, and the whole product becomes molasses.

—Dr. Alphonso Gusrin, an eminent French surgeon, regards tow-dressings as the best for wounds. The tow appears to act as a filter, which, while it admits the air, prevents the germs floating in it from reaching the wounded part, and so preserves the pus from putrid fermentation.

—An establishment has been started in Berlin for the manufacture of vanilline from the inner bark of the pine-tree. It is declared that a tree of ordinary size will yield about $20 worth of the substance. For flavoring it is said to be fully equal to vanilla, which, if true, will doubtless soon cause it to supersede that article in the market, as it can be sold much cheaper.

—The substitution of metallic for vegetable substances in constructive works has been going on among mankind for a considerable time and with accelerative force, and the movement appears at last to have spread to the lower animals, as at the March meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal a crow's nest was exhibited which was constructed of pieces of tin telegraph wire, very ingeniously interwoven, and it was stated that similar nests, and others made of soda-water bottle wire, were not uncommon in the vicinity of the telegraph store-yard.

TELEGRAPH MACHINES BY AIR.—An account is published of an interesting exhibition of telegraph machines, worked exclusively by air, lately given in London by Mr. Gauntaris, the inventor. A number of different instruments were on view. The impulse is produced at the end of a tube by the operator, and performs the mechanical work of the other end, either by ringing a bell or turning a needle round a dial. A rapidity and precision can be made equal to the electric telegraph. Attached to each machine is a bell and dial, and the message is transmitted by the moving of a small lever, which drives the air through a pipe to the other operator. As the lever is moved up and down, the dial, standing where the message is destined for, registers whatever the words may be. Each dial is supplied with a needle; and as each spurt of air is pressed against the words of the machine, the needle is moved exactly the number of times that the lever is pressed. Each instrument can receive or send a message about four hundred yards, and is therefore of special convenience, for private intercommunication.

—The study of the form of the brain in extinct animals is one of much interest, and has been prosecuted with considerable success lately. Some years ago Prof. Lartet, of Paris, pointed out the small size of the brain in Eocene mammalia, as compared with those of the present time. Prof. Gervais has described the characters presented by the skull cast in Toxodon—a remarkable and gigantic animal, whose remains have been found in the post-Tertiary beds of Buenos Ayres. His observations led him to coincide with the view of Owen—that Toxodon represents a distinct order of mammals. Prof. Cope recently pointed out the small size of the brain in the extinct Symborodon, from the Miocene strata of the plains, showing that the greater part of the skull was occupied by immense air chambers. Prof. Marsh, of Yale College, has since compared the brain cavities of various genera of the American Eocene, Miocene and Pliocene periods with existing forms, and finds those of the first-named epoch to be exceedingly small, and that there is a steady increase in size in the subsequent periods. Thus the brain in the gigantic Unitatherium, of the Eocene, is little larger than that of some reptiles. In the lines of the rhinoceros, tapir and horse a regular increase in size from such beginnings can be traced.

—Many people suppose that the photographs which professedly represent moonlight scenes are taken by the light of the moon. But this opinion is shown to be erroneous by Dr. Schrauss, in a paper published in the Photographic News. According to his description of the method of preparing these pictures, the landscape which is to appear illuminated by moonlight is photographed in bright sunshine, with a very short exposure, so that strong contrasts are obtained and very deep shadows. The sky of the negative is covered or rendered opaque, and then a vigorous print is taken upon greenish-tinted, albuminized paper. The green paper is of the same kind precisely as other tinted, albuminized paper, which is largely used for portraiture. Or if this tinted, albuminized paper cannot be obtained, then the print is secured on ordinary white paper, and the picture afterward rendered of a greenish hue by means of a water-color or a dye. When an impression of the landscape has been obtained, this is protected by a mask, and then into the sky portion is printed a cloud negative, showing the orb of the luminary. A suitable mask is contrived by cutting out the outline of a print from the same negative, and placing this as a shield over the landscape impression. As in many moonlight pictures the outline of the luminary is to be seen, it stands to reason that the disk has also been secured by artificial means.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the lint is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents bolls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 80. SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. GILMAN BROTHERS,

Mobile	88
Total	342

On Saturday, with no demand for Liverpool or Havre, the sales were confined to 141 bales, of which 74 were taken by one buyer and the rest divided among six. Nothing transpired to indicate any variation in prices, but the advance at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 1-32@3-32c. in futures was calculated to inspire factors with increased confidence. On Monday, there being no freight-room for Havre, for which there are several orders pending, the demand was confined to a very few buyers, only one of whom was enabled to fill an order of any magnitude, the offers from others of recent ruling rates being declined by factors, who held ⅛c. above the quotations, and refused to make any concessions. The sales embraced 154 bales. On Tuesday the unfavorable tenor of the dispatches was calculated to have a depressing influence, a decline of 1-16d. being reported at Liverpool, with sales of only 8,000 bales, and of ⅛c. in spots and 1-16@⅛c. in futures at New York, while foreign exchange gave way 7-10 per cent., making the entire decline since Friday 1 per cent. Two buyers came forward and took together 550 bales for Mexico and the North, making the entire sales 589 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 875 bales, against 1,350 for the corresponding time last week and 700 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 995,583 bales, against 1,210,771 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 208,932 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 241,586—3,478,057 against 3,719,643. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 68,355 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 15,398 to France, and of 177,738 to other foreign ports. SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The annual camp meeting on the Seashore camp ground will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, enjoying the healthful and refreshing sea breeze. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent or temporary tents thereon.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $10, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has sent to the camp ground a large amount of lumber suitable for building tents, to be sold at reasonable prices to persons wishing to build or improve their tents.

A number of tents are built for rent to individuals or families, some twelve feet by fourteen, at $10, others twelve feet by twenty-five, at $15 for the period of the camp meeting.

Provision is made for good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents each for breakfast, dinner and supper, or $1 25 per day. Lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

Arrangements have been made with the railroads for conveyance of passengers, at reduced prices, by the New Orleans and Mobile road, from New Orleans for $2.50, and from Mobile for $2, for the round trip, and proportionate prices from all the way stations. By Morgan's Louisiana and Texas road, the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago road, and the Mobile and Ohio road, at half the usual price of regular fare. The first two of these roads will issue a special camp meeting ticket, with return ticket. The other roads will furnish the ordinary ticket, which, punched by the conductor, will be retained by the passenger; and at the office of the camp ground the tickets will all be stamped by the secretary to make them good to return on. In New Orleans tickets can be had at the ticket office, corner of Camp and Common streets, and at the depot, at the head of Canal street; and in Mobile at the depot, foot of Government street, and at all the way stations on the roads.

Passenger trains will leave New Orleans at 8 o'clock A. M., and 3.15 and 4.40 P. M.; and Mobile at 8.15 A. M. and 5.30 P. M., all stopping at all the way stations, including camp ground station, except the 4.40 P. M. express train from New Orleans, which will stop at the camp ground and all the principal stations.

Freight trains will leave the depot, at the head of Girod street, New Orleans, and at the foot of Government street, Mobile, at 8 o'clock P. M., and take freight to and from the camp meeting at half the usual rates of charge.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Gris and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, B. O. L. Rayne, J. H. Keller, G. W. W. Goodwyn, P. Hallaran and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

From this date to the commencement of the camp meeting some one or more of the trustees will be on the camp ground almost daily.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
P. HALLARAN, Secretary.

SUMMER MORNING.

To wake of summer morn, and from the gray
Warm roof of slumb'rous vapor, soft and low,
Hear music coming from the quiet bay—
Ethereal beauty, sweetest far away,
Upon the glimmering waters brood and flow;
Divine as is a rose in fullest blow.
With cool dews of the happy dusk of May Still dreaming on its leaves, in the first glow;
And listening, deem it half a dream, the while
'Tis lost beyond the headland; and, in lieu,
From the open casement where the lilacs smile,
Be visited by airs from beds of blue
Violets and heath. Then rise and walk a mile
By hedges, with the wave-lights dazzling through.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

RALEIGH, July 15.—The Cotton States Congress adjourned to-day at one o'clock, after a harmonious and interesting session of three days. The only business of importance transacted to-day was hearing an address, by the appointment of the last Congress, from Col. J. N. Bridgers, of North Carolina, on the general subject of agriculture in the Southern States. There was compelled to be a change of agriculture in this State; population and prosperity were diminishing in quantity and quality. The loss in production from 1860 to 1870 had been enormous, while the loss in area of cultivated land was over seven million acres. He was opposed to the cutting up of the land into small farms as tending to reduce all farming to the forty-acre and mule system. The inert minerals in the earth were sufficient to produce good crops by atmospheric action; this action was to be found in its composition. The South could save $100,000,000 in feeding horses on oats and clover, instead of corn and fodder.

BALTIMORE, July 16.—Chatworch's and Strocker's runs flooded the western portion of the city. A number of wholesale houses in the central portion of the city had their cellars filled.

KEY WEST, July 16.—Yellow fever is abating. No new cases have been reported for several days. We hope soon to be able to report all well.

J. V. HARRIS, M. D.,
Health Officer.

GALVESTON, July 16.—The first bale of new cotton was received today by Dibrell & Hodges. It was shipped from Brownsville, Texas, July 10, by Robert Dalzell, classes good middling, and weighs four hundred and thirty-eight pounds.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Capt. Eads was recently in Washington on business connected with the jetties which he is constructing at the mouth of the Mississippi river. He says he has now four hundred men employed, and has projected the work toward the deep water to the extent of over three thousand feet. The water is about eight feet in depth over most of the distance so far reached. The improvement is progressing at the rate of nearly two hundred feet a day. The force will soon be increased. Capt. Eads calls what is being built provisional work, which is to be strengthened and materially changed as the work progresses, it now serving as a barrier from mud and water. He expects in one year to reach water deep enough for the largest vessels. He left for New York last night.

NEW YORK, July 19.—A Key West letter of July 9 says: "Among the most prominent persons who have died here of yellow fever are Mr. Allen, telegraph operator; Mrs. Townsend, wife of the deputy collector of customs; Mr. Van Dusen, Methodist clergyman; Mr. Hogan, cigar manufacturer; Mr. Auchinteck, chief engineer of the revenue cutter Seward; Mr. Johnson, lighthouse establishment, and many others of less note."

The first bale of this season's crop of Louisiana cotton, raised in St. Landry parish by Joseph Berand, and shipped to Bliss, Barnett & Co., of this city, was put up for sale today at the Cotton Exchange, and was purchased by Merrill & Co., brokers, at eighteen cents.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 15.—Heavy rains have caused much damage in Wales. The River Ogmore, county of Glamorgan, has overflowed its banks, inundating the town of Big End. One person and much live stock drowned. Great damage has also been done to property. The water in a reserve pond for supplying the Monmouthshire canal, at Concannon, burst through its banks, and thirteen persons were drowned by the flood.

There is a flood in the Cherwell valley, near the town of Banbury, county of Oxford, England, and the water is still rising. The crops, especially hay, have suffered severely.

Much damage has been done in Devonshire by the rain-storms. The rivers and streams are swollen, and at a number of places there are inundations.

By the bursting of Monmouthshire reservoir a factory and a number of dwellings were destroyed.

The River Elbro has overflowed. Boats are plying in the main streets of the town of Monmouth. Similar reports of inundations come from Ross and Hereford, county of Hereford, and Carleon, county of Monmouth. Fears are entertained for the safety of the foundations of the railways. At eight o'clock to-night the water in the overflowed streams was still rising. The rivers which pass through Bristol and the lower portion of that city are flooded. Thousands of acres of land lying between the Frome and Severn are also under water.

MADRID, July 16.—Fresh bands of Carlists have taken refuge in France. The French commander at Forbes telegraphed to Paris for instructions. The provinces of Valencia and Castillon are free of Carlists. The insurrection is confined to the mountains in Navarre and Basque and Catalonia provinces. Jovellar's headquarters are at Larinsna.

QUEENSTOWN, July 17.—The whale with which the steamship Scythia came in contact off Roche's Point has been brought here by a tug. It was picked up off Daily Colton. It is fifty-four feet long.

BERLIN, July 19.—The Bavarians elected a college to consist of seventy-seven Liberals and seventy-nine Ultramontanes.

LONDON, July 19.—Lady Franklin is dead.

Robert Dale Owen, the Spiritualist, Insane.

The Chicago Tribune, July 1, says: "A dispatch of this morning tells a sorrowful story, Robert Dale Owen has become insane. After a long life of earnest, unselfish effort for the good of mankind, this terrible infliction comes. The cause of it does not lie many months back. When the heartless imposture of the Holmes mediums, the Philadelphia conspirators with 'Katie King,' was exposed, the shock to Mr. Owen was tremendous. He had accepted the pretended manifestations of these rascals with implicit faith. He lived some time in Philadelphia in order to miss none of the seances. The repeated apparitions of 'Katie' were to him conclusive proof of immortality. He pinned his faith in the life hereafter, in reunion with his father and his wife, on what spiritualism, and especially upon what this pretended spirit, showed him. Readers of his article in the Atlantic Monthly upon 'Katie King' will remember the syllogism which the good old man painfully constructed therein, by which he proved, to his own perfect satisfaction, that the visitor was indeed a disembodied bit of supernaturalism. The day before the article appeared the fraud was exposed. Mr. Owen wept bitterly, it is said, when a conviction that he had been made the dupe of a trio of knaves forced itself upon him. He telegraphed to Boston to cut out the article, but it was too late. The magazine was already printed. A thin slip of paper, disclaiming any editorial responsibility, and thus ruthlessly increasing that of the author, was prefixed to the sketch. And thus it came to pass that Robert Dale Owen's syllogistic proof that 'Katie King' was a spirit and 'Katie's' own confession that she was a fraud were published together throughout the country. The mind, once so vigorous, could not stand the blow that shook the faith of half a lifetime. The insanity feared at that time has at last come. The sun that rose in splender sets in gloom."

ANOTHER SAD CASE.

The Memphis Avalanche, June 30, says: "Charles Lyon, a citizen of Smithland, about thirty-five years of age, an enthusiastic spiritualist, lost his mind not long since and wandered from home. Although a reader of general spiritualistic literature, it is alleged by his relatives that the immediate cause of his insanity was the reading of Dr. Samuel Watson's works on that subject. Leaving home in a mysterious manner, it was believed by his friends that he would come to Memphis, and Mr. C. D. Davis, a half brother of the unfortunate lunatic, also a citizen of Smithland, started in pursuit of him, arriving in this city last Monday. His search led him into the bottoms opposite Memphis, where he found his brother in a deplorable condition—clothed in rags and fearfully emaciated from long fasting. Inquiries, made of people living where the man was found, developed the fact that he had not tasted food for thirteen days, though repeated efforts had been made to induce him to eat. Mr. Davis started for Smithland with him on Monday evening's boat."—Western Methodist.

THE NEW YORK Tablet recently declared as follows: "It is a remarkable fact that our American republic is the only nation on the globe—the only one, at all events, among the first-rate powers—where the church is not openly persecuted, or under more or less of political restraint. Here only the church is completely free."

Upon this the New York Evangelist says:

"Such a concession as this is quite significant. How came this country to be so pre-eminent for its equal justice to all creeds and classes? Was its policy borrowed from Rome? It is but a few years since Protestant liberty was unknown within its walls, and Bible and printing presses were alike proscribed, or virtually suppressed by the censorship. Is it from the church by traditions of the past? We know only too well what they were, and if there was any one thing characteristic of the founders of this republic it was unrelenting repugnance and opposition to them.

"We are not disposed to leave the question an enigma. Nay, it is not an enigma. The truth may be known and read of all men. The germ of what our nation is was visible in the character and institutions of the early settlers, and if there was anything that more than all else molded these, it was the conviction, confirmed by the experience of struggle against civil and ecclesiastical despotism, with its Romish precedents, in the lands from which they came."

WHAT animals are often seen at funerals? Black kids.

The Epidemic of Measles in the Fiji Islands.

An epidemic of measles, introduced at Levuka, it is believed, by the British man-of-war Dido, when that ship returned from Sydney with the King and his two sons last January, has assumed alarming proportions. The Levuka correspondent of the Sydney Morning Herald, writing on March 2, says: "The measles have been and are still producing sad distress among the native population. Hundreds have already died, and the ravages of the disease still continue unabated. Ratu Savanca, half brother to Thakombau, and Roko, a governor of the central province of Fiji, one of the most intelligent chiefs, and highly respected by all classes of persons, died a few days ago, and Ritova, the troublesome old chief of Macuata, also died on Saturday evening last, at Nasova. Eight or ten deaths have occurred almost every day for the last fortnight or three weeks. The disease has made its appearance in several of the families of the white residents, especially the children, although some adults have been also visited by it; but as none of the whites have died the natives are greatly perplexed. They say it is big sickness which has come from Sydney, and why do not the whites die as well as themselves? Seeing this is not the case, they have come to the conclusion that, to use their own expression, 'God is angry with them for giving away their land, and so he has sent the sickness and death to punish them.' They say further that the white men brought the sickness to Fiji that the natives may all be killed and the white men get all the land. Under this impression, whenever they are taken sick they refuse to take either food or medicine, or to obey any of the directions given by the medical officers. However much they are cautioned against exposing themselves to the cold, the moment the attendant leaves them they rush out of their houses, jump into the first waterhole they can find, and drink cold water to any extent. The consequence is that they are almost invariably attacked with dysentery, which very speedily carries them off."

The Melbourne Argus of the nineteenth of April says: "According to the latest reports from Fiji, by way of New Zealand, the epidemic continues with fearful mortality among the natives. They are paralyzed and refuse to assist each other. All the head chiefs are dead. Three hundred natives have died in the Island of Ovalau alone, and in the other islands a greater number have succumbed. The disease, which is always followed by dysentery, has assumed a form of plague. Several of the native towns are depopulated. At one town the bodies lay for days uncovered and were mangled by pigs. The natives are only burying the bodies a few inches below the surface, and the late rains have washed the soil off. The effluvium emitted is sickening, and the worst results are anticipated. The natives are too panic-stricken to obey the directions issued by the government for the suppression of the malady. Trade is at a standstill."

WOFFORD COLLEGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.—The recent commencement was attended with more than usual interest. The multitude of friends and visitors in attendance exceeded that of any former occasion. The hospitality of the Spartanburg community failed not to meet the agreeable claims of the presence of friends from far and near. The sermon, by Bishop Keener, was preached to an immense audience.

Rev. Dr. Shipp, having been elected professor of exegetical theology in Vanderbilt University, tendered his resignation, which the trustees reluctantly accepted, accompanying their action with very complimentary resolutions.

Prof. James H. Carlisle, LL. D., was unanimously elected to succeed Dr. Shipp in the presidency of the college, retaining his former professorship. Rev. W. W. Duncan, of Virginia, was elected professor of mental and moral science. Daniel A. DuPre, A. M., and Charles F. Smith, A. M., were elected professors, their distinctive chairs to be indicated hereafter. Prof. Warren DuPre was elected treasurer, vice Dr. Shipp, resigned.

The reorganization of the faculty by the board of trustees meets with a general and hearty approval. The trustees found the college in excellent condition, and all are hopeful and rejoicing. Yet there is a sadness and regret in connection with the severance of the highly-esteemed and much-loved Dr. Shipp from official connection with old Wofford and his removal beyond the limits of South Carolina.

C. D. CECIL, P. C.

Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: The commencement of this institution was of unusual interest. The sermon by Rev. O. R. Blue, of the Alabama Conference, was everything that could be desired—interesting, productive of good, eminently practical. It abounded in rich religious thought, and produced a profound impression upon the audience. The exercises of the Male Institute, the next day, gave great satisfaction, and the speakers acquitted themselves with credit, while some excelled. At night one of the delightful concerts of the occasion took place. A pleasing variety was given. The national air of Wales, sung in chorus, with suitable accompaniments, produced a sensation. The recitation in concert of Jean Ingelow's "High Tide on the Coast of Lincolnshire" was rendered with fine effect, and was worthy of all praise.

On Tuesday the junior exhibition took place, consisting of recitations in poetry, of fresh and choice selections, compositions and music, affording a fine opportunity of judging concerning the advancement of the pupils, which was in every respect satisfactory. Then followed the address of Prof. Darby Callaway, before the literary societies, on the subject: "What Can Woman Do?" It was an able speech, abounding in historical examples and allusions, in choice expressions and elegant rhetoric. The speaker delighted his audience and achieved merited success. The commencement concert at night met the high expectations that had been raised. The calisthenic exercises were of a unique character, consisting of wand, hoop and dumbbell exercises. The raised platforms upon which the girls were placed, one above the other, displayed the movement of every pupil, and the scenes were exceedingly beautiful. The singing of the Marseillaise hymn in chorus, with characteristic representations, was interesting and attractive. The instrumental and vocal performances sustained the high character and proved the great success of the music department.

Wednesday was the great day of the occasion. The graduating class was composed of three—Miss F. Bama Boswell, to whom was awarded the society valedictory; Miss M. Lizzie Eppes, the Latin salutatory; and Miss Lavinia R. Day, of Baton Rouge, La., the valedictory of the class. What this class lacked in numbers they fully made up in excellence and scholarship. The compositions of the class were of high order, evincing careful training, high cultivation, abounding in thought, felicity of illustration, facility and elegance of expression, and they were read with distinctness and grace, with proper emphasis and ease of utterance. The appearance and performance of this class gave the highest satisfaction to the audience. The baccalaureate of the president, Rev. A. D. McVoy, upon delivering the diplomas, was in good taste, highly appropriate, not too long, pure, chaste, elegant in style and beautiful in sentiment, so that everybody was ready to say: "Well, that was well done."

This commencement was considered on all sides as a grand success. The fine impression produced cannot but result in good for the institution. It proved conclusively that this institution, which has such a deep hold upon the hearts of its friends and patrons, is still alive and destined to survive through the pressure of hard times. Its friends are encouraged, and a strong belief possesses them that the institution is a permanency, and continued success awaits it in the near future. The president and his teachers have worked hard and faithfully, and have met with deserved success.

The encouraging prospect for a good crop this fall leads us to expect a large increase of patronage. This, beyond a doubt, is the place where patrons can send their sons and daughters without the risks that are incident to larger places. Here, first of all, health is found. No sickness has occurred this year among the pupils. Everything is done for the pupil to secure health, comfort and proper training.

The curriculum of the institution is comprehensive, the standard high and the teaching thorough. The best moral and religious influences prevail, and all the advantages of religious instruction are secured. What more can be desired?

The president is now entering on his fifth year, and I am happy to say, in my judgment, is in higher esteem with the trustees and community, and with more encouraging prospects in the future, than at any previous period of his connection with the institution. Rev. W. A. Montgomery, of the Alabama Conference, has been elected as the principal of the Male Institute, and will at once enter upon his duties. He has had experience as a teacher, and has met with good success wherever he has taught. The boys will be safe in his hands, thoroughly taught and faithfully trained. The board of trustees would cordially recommend this institution to the confidence and support of all who have children to educate.

A. H. MITCHELL,
President of the Board.

Mansfield Female College.

REPORT OF VISITING COMMITTEE.

The examination of the classes of the Mansfield Female College began on Friday, June 25, and closed on Tuesday, June 29, 1875.

The examination evinced close study on the part of the pupils, and patient as well as thorough work on the part of the teachers. It was so conducted as to test the knowledge of the pupils of the entire course of study over which they had gone during the session. This was done by examining upon different parts of the books studied, the questions being asked in such a way as to elicit answers which showed a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the subject. We would call special attention to this feature of instruction as characteristic of the institution under its present management. The pupils are not required to commit to memory the answers in the book, but they are required to study the subject until it is understood thoroughly, and then give the answer in their own language; and they are questioned until their knowledge is fully tested.

The annual sermon, preached on Sunday by Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, was appropriate, able and impressive.

The exhibitions at night were well attended, and were highly creditable to all concerned.

The graduating exercises were all of the highest order of excellence, and to crown the whole Judge Seay, of Shreveport, delivered an address which was a masterpiece of its kind. His able and scholarly defense of classical studies against the "so-called practical tendencies of the age, and of the Christian religion against the would-be" leaders in scientific studies, ought to be published and read everywhere.

Upon the whole, we are prepared to report the examination and commencement a complete success. The oldest citizens speak of this as "the best commencement for years."

And now, in commending the Mansfield Female College to the confidence of the public, we deem it proper to call attention to the following considerations:

President Armstrong is certainly the man for the position he fills. This is shown by the high appreciation in which he is held by his patrons, and the constant increase of patronage under his administration; so that upon the wreck of the past he has gradually built up, until now the institution approximates and we think will speedily attain its former high position.

The friends of the school are fully aroused to the importance of sustaining it.

The president is determined to employ the best teachers, and to surround himself with the best facilities for teaching.

The location is eminently healthy.

The people of Mansfield, in substantial refinement and high tone of moral character, are unsurpassed by any community in the country.

In view of these facts we are persuaded that no young lady need expect advantages elsewhere that cannot be had here, and we therefore present the Mansfield Female College as a worthy rival of any other female school in the South.

JOHN L. SCALES,
For the Visiting Committee.

High School, Mount Sterling, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: The Mount Sterling High School has just closed its sixth session. Circumstances beyond the control of the professor forbade a regular commencement, but it closed with an exhibition, at which we had some most excellent speeches from the young men and compositions from the young ladies, and some good music interspersed. All passed off agreeably and pleasantly, and the exercises far excelled the expectations of a large and appreciative audience. Everything indicated that Prof. S. S. Mellen well understands educating and training the young. He gives that solid and wholesome instruction that suits the exigency of the times. He looks well to the moral and religious culture, and we venture to say that none leave his school without feeling the power of his moral and religious influence. Hence we feel safe in saying that the Mount Sterling High School ranks among the first of our high schools in advancing the cause of education, and we can safely commend it to the future patronage of our people. It is situated in one of the most healthy and pleasant little towns in the State. The people are intelligent, cultivated and refined. Our account of the great financial pressure the school has not been as large as it would have been; but everything promises well for it in the future. Crops are promising and monetary affairs are much easier, and the people of this section seem to be more hopeful and cheerful.

MOUNT STERLING, ALA., July 9, 1875.

Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

At the late Jackson District Conference the following items of general interest were reported:

Pastoral charges, 12; missions, 1; number of members, 1,616; number of members received this year, 71; number of Sunday school missionary societies, 6; number of weekly class meetings, 11; number of weekly prayer meetings, 10; number of parsonages, 8.

Elected to the Annual Conference: W. L. Nugent, of Jackson, W. G. Kearney, of Vernon, J. T. Cameron, of Madison, and N. H. Lace, of Yazoo City.

The business method followed afforded an opportunity for obtaining an intelligent acquaintance with the personnel of the Conference. The preachers in charge are mostly young men, posted in the traditional customs, but gathering their real fitness for their vocation in the exercise of the pulpit and pastorate. The pulpit brings to light the real preaching ability of the man, and the pastorate is the only real test of administrative skill.

The preachers on this district follow the usual diversities, with an exception or so in favor of discipline. Zeal and love, balanced with the Petrine quality of boldness, adapt them to exigencies more or less frequent in the work, and mark them for distinguished use. Among even so limited a number of preachers the clerical traits will eke out.

Here is one who in his report is ready and dutifully eager to enter every open door; but it is plain that the man he relies on to open the door is not there. All the interests of the church are scrupulously superintended, but nothing comes of it because there are no suitable persons to do them.

Here is another whose toleration of human infirmities puts John the Baptist to shame, and rather reflects upon Paul's care for quarterage. His patience and endurance would be sublime but for the lurking suspicion that he does not feel that he has earned much. The feeling as the fruit of labor ought to be in the man to insure respect and support.

Here is another who is anxious to show good reason in the untowardness of the circumstances for the backwardness of the work in his charge—received that, if he does not belong to a type, he ought to have a better opportunity.

Here is another in dead earnest. An ideal of chaste and rigid perfection is before him. He frets at the hinderances to its instant attainment, but labors on with impassioned fervor. His enthusiasm is contagious.

And here is another, shy, unwilling to betray a truth that peeps out of every word he speaks. He loves to preach, but has not that feeling for anything else. He is almost sure to make a preacher of distinction, and almost equally sure to lose much of his work for lack of nurture.

Here is another still, who preaches well, does other things well, and has much else to do—a man of work—acquiring the ability for turning off much work—one of the best types of a traveling Methodist preacher.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

MOODY AND SANKEY.

BY ELLEN E. HARRON.

They tell us that men must be learn'd
To talk of religion and God,
That "ignorant people won't do"
To show us the path Christ hath trod.

How strange! O how strange! thus to speak,
When, humble in station and name,
Poor fishermen down by the seas
Were those who apostles became.

In England, where "priests" in their robes
Are paid by the taxes to pray,
'Twould seem that religion should thrive
And flourish most grandly alway.

But, ah! from the plain, far-off West
Two men "without orders" have gone
To kindle a flame in her breast
That heralds a bright-coming dawn.

O spirit of Wesley! again
Thou deignest to visit the earth;
O spirits immortal! new-born,
Proclaim in your gladness its worth,

And waft to the ends of the world
The message so grand and so high:
The banner of God is unfurled!
Enlist ye for homes in the sky!

The Itinerancy.

——, ALA., May 14, 1875.

——: My Dear Brother—When I read your letter of January 5, in which you said or wrote a good deal about the itinerancy of our beloved church, I laid it carefully away, that I might at some convenient time take it up and write you an elaborate reply. To-day I have been writing a sermon on the blessedness of giving to the Lord (text, Luke vi, 38,) and so I find it very pleasant to turn away from such arduous labor to spend an hour or so in easy and pleasant chit-chat with a dear brother.

I am not surprised much at your rejoicing because I have had some thought of locating at the end of the present year on account of my wife's delicate health, but I am very much astonished that you are not loyal to our noble Methodist itinerancy, especially since you live in a "fat streak," and are a steward where you always have good preaching, and plenty of money to pay for it. I am afraid the "fat streaks" are so selfish that those who live in them—the laymen particularly—do not lift up their eyes and look abroad in the land to behold what a mighty, grand and glorious instrument or power our itinerancy is for the accomplishment of the world's evangelization. As for me, I can see nothing but itinerancy in the Savior's great commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Can you see anything else in it? Anything like a settled pastorate there? I think not. All the ministers of the New Testament were, to a greater or less extent, itinerants. They went forth under the great commission, and were efficient and useful in the conversion of sinners, and in building up the church. Have you read Haygood's prize essay, entitled "Go, or Send?" The duty of the ministry is to "go"—itinerate the world over; and the duty of the church is to "send" them by their means, their prayers and their mighty faith. As the ministers "go" they must not expect the ravens to meet them and furnish them loaves of bread, nor must they look for the manna to be rained down from heaven to feed them and their families. No! the church that has been organized by them, that "has learned Messiah's name," and has received all the rich fullness of his infinite love, must fill their haversacks, load their provision wagons, and keep them well supplied with all they need. If the church would do all this as it should be done there would be no hinderance to the itinerancy. The grand body—infantry, cavalry and artillery—would move on gloriously to meet and fight and overcome the last armed foe, and bring back the captive world to Christ, to God and to heaven. Ah! here is the trouble: The church does not support the itinerant ministry. She has become demoralized in these evil times. Everything is out of joint—the church among the rest. She is either sitting down by the way, neglectful of her great work, and mourning over her lost negroes, lands and money, or she has turned aside from the right way to run wildly and foolishly after the world and the things which it contains. In either case she is doing wrong, very wrong, and is thereby incurring the righteous displeasure of Heaven. God is angry, and hence he has flung his mighty judgments abroad. They are walking through all the earth, and it trembles and shakes to its very center beneath their mighty tread. He has done this not that he would destroy his people, but because he would wake them up, and induce them to turn again unto him, walk in his holy ways and perform his glorious work. "I am no prophet," in the true or original sense of that term, "nor the son of a prophet," but still I believe, and I will venture to say: These judgments will continue among us and upon us until the church awakes and comes up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty," or until she is swept, as with a besom of destruction, from the face of the earth. I do not believe God will long love or own his church as she now is. She must amend her ways, or he will cast her off forever. The prospect of Zion, in the direction her eyes are turned, is gloomy enough. Oh! it is dark, dreadfully dark! She is looking earthward—and with sadness I say, hellward too, I fear! But there is a prospect above her which is bright and inviting. Will she turn her eyes and behold and rejoice in it? Ah, Heaven only knows! I hope for the best. Seeing and believing all these solemn and awful things as I do, I am praying for the help of God, and I am lifting my voice among my people like a trumpet. I am troubled, greatly troubled, about them. I can scarcely rest in pleasant sleep as I used to do. I sit up late at night that I may toil in the responsible work of preparing my messages for those over whom God hath made me an humble overseer. Sometimes satan suggests to me that "it is all of no use;" but I heed him not. I still go on in my great work, trying to feel that God is my sufficiency, who will enable me and all his suffering itinerants to stand at our posts and win the well-fought day.

You must not suppose that I regard my people as worse than the people of the church are in other places. No; for I believe they are only a sample, and a fair sample at that. I read our church papers regularly, and I think I understand the general condition of the whole church. My heart has been greatly rejoiced at the news of great revivals in numerous important places of late; but will they continue and glow and blaze until their beautiful light shall fill the world with millennial glory? I hope for the better, yet with my hope there is mingled some fear.

God's general plan is: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

These tithes, mark you, are for the support of the ministers—the itinerants, those who give themselves wholly to the holy office and its great work. If they be brought, all of them, the great blessing will come; otherwise it shall not be poured out. These tithes must be brought first—before the blessing can descend. We sometimes think it takes religion to make us bring the tithes; but the truth is the tithes must be brought in order that we may obtain religion, in all its fullness and glory. Religion will not come to the people who do not bring all the tithes into the storehouse. Terrible truths! Nevertheless, they are truths, and cannot be denied.

But the great question is: Do the people of the church pay their tithes? The church pays her freedmen, her book-keepers, her clerks, etc., generally very well; but her ministers, her itinerants, must live on a mere pittance—the crumbs that fall from her tables.

Now the only way to obtain the great "blessing" which God has prepared and is holding on high for the church (I conceive it to be the great fullness of the blessings of the gospel of Christ that shall fill the hearts, homes and nations of the earth with "love, joy, peace and righteousness") is to bring her means to the holy altar, and there consecrate them to the Lord for the support and use of his ministers. Will the church do this, and then receive the promised blessing? We shall see!

Itinerancy declining? O no, my dear brother. Those noble men of God are more devoted now than they have ever been. Their devotion has been made perfect "through" the "suffering" they have endured. There may be a few exceptions, but the great body of them are loyal to the itinerancy, and had rather die than give it up. I can never locate unless I am satisfied the voice of Providence calls me to do so. I love the church and her glorious itinerancy with all the ardor of my warmest and strongest affection. Having spent the best part of my life—from nineteen to forty—in the itinerant ministry of my beloved church, I must not, I cannot now, without a divine call, turn away and enter something else.

The Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches all have itinerancy, but they do not call it that; for I have actually seen ministers of all those churches riding circuits. Their itinerancy is far inferior to ours. Indeed ours is the only itinerancy that is scriptural and worthy of the name.

Well, well, well! I have fairly preached to you. I am used to doing that everywhere. I cannot help it now. I hope you have paid good attention, and that these seeds will be productive of a good harvest in you. Love the itinerancy, pray for all the good and true men and women that are in it, and continue to do all you can for its support. Wife, babe and all the rest of us are doing well. Our love to all.

Most affectionately, W.

Doctrine and Practice.

MR. EDITOR: The rule of life for the Christian can be none other than the word of God; and this rule partakes of the nature of its Maker. It is perfect, holy, good, and stringently positive. No code of human discipline equals in clearness and positiveness the code of Jesus Christ, for its reach takes in all the motions of the body, mind and spirit. It is positive in the statement of doctrine, but no less so in its statement of practice; and this oneness of statement renders all service nugatory which departs from the doctrine or ignores the practice. Good doctrine may be preached and nobody's conscience be ruffled, and a church may be filled with members and discipline be ignored. How so? Why the doctrine may be weighted with such a wealth of refined language as to hide its true meaning, and the precept bearing on walk and conversation so gently stated as to do away with its positiveness. Do I say that I love Christ? The demand made upon me to prove my sincerity is: Keep my commandments. If I profess to be a disciple, the profound "follow me" becomes the test of my honesty. From these positive requirements—to "keep" and to "follow"—the path of the pilgrim is made very narrow; and what serious reflections should we have, and how earnest should our examination be of our belief and practice!

To be in the church, to attend generally upon the ordinances, to abstain from the grosser pastimes of the world, to aid in support of the gospel, is all very good; but how about prayer at home and in the assembly? How about studying God's word, and making it not the rule of outward conduct only, but the lamp of the heart? How about impressing the spirituality of the gospel upon others by a holy conversation? Are these left aside? Then listen: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The light must shine. We are commanded to pray, and at all times; we are commanded to love God with all our heart, and to abstain from every form of evil; to be renewed in the spirit of our minds, and not to be conformed to this world. How do we stand in regard to these points? Hearken to the word: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Plain words, plainly spoken. Dare we impugn their authority, or modify the truth they announce for our consideration? Luther denounced justification by works, and the evolution of time has revealed the fact that this same Pelagian error has reappeared and needs to be dealt with. People in these times are boasting of their doing. They go to church, they wish the gospel success, they give something, they don't drink—except now and then—pay their debts when they can; in fact are always doing, and wonder that they have done so much. But come to the point: "Mr. Church Steward, what have you done?" No answer. Bad for the steward. "Church member, are you living in the world and yet not of the world?" Dead silence. Is the poor member deaf? "No, sir; but you have no right to inquire into my way of life. No preacher ever took such a liberty before, and I am too long a member to submit to this sort of pastoral supervision."

"Brother preacher, have you been earnest in preaching the words of Christ, and also in teaching the people how to follow him?" "Well, as to the doctrine, I have been instant in and out of season; but as to discipline I feel rather guilty. You see I found the church thus when I came to the work, and really I did not feel as though it was my duty to rectify the oversight of my brother who had charge before I came. It would cause trouble in the church, hurt my usefulness, and, more than all, reproach my brother minister." We pass the brother.

In all this there is no over-coloring. The fear of man daunts the herald of the cross. Christ says: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life;" but our slurring over these words, and keeping back a most essential part of the truth they teach, accounts for the condition of things in the church.

As the doctrines of the Bible, and the mode of life it prescribes for those who believe these doctrines, are enunciated in the most positive form, by so much the more ought they to be plainly set forth and enforced by the teachers.

In our day men are rather lovers of themselves than lovers of God. They will assume the form of godliness, but deny its power in their lives. The lust of the world crowds out the humility of the gospel, and thus men are led not to "endure sound doctrine." Amusements are indulged in which dwarf the growth of spiritual life in the soul, molding the heart after the spirit of this world, and the foul atmosphere in which professors are willingly living stifles the aspirations of the soul. Prayer becomes a vain repetition of words, and a Christ-like walk and a holy conversation are rare.

The positive side of religion has been hid long enough, and the gospel demands that this omission of duty on the part of all Christians cease, and the true light be once more lighted in the temple.

INDAMORA.

The Village Church.

It is an unpretending little Methodist church, sadly in need of repair; but how dear to the heart of one who has worshiped in it from childhood—one who was there consecrated to God in baptism, who has wept tears of repentance at its sacred altar, and there felt herself accepted with God for Jesus' sake! It was in that dear old church that I united with the people of God, and resolved to serve him; there that I brought my own little ones to be consecrated to him, and around that hallowed altar I have so often received the emblems of my Savior's death and passion. Ah! we have had some happy seasons in that little church—times when refreshing came from the presence of the Lord, when believers were made happy in his love, and sinners "almost and altogether persuaded" to become Christians; and though there have been periods of coldness and darkness, yet there were always a few faithful ones who would not forget Zion, but would repair to her courts, and there plead with God for a renewal of his favor. Should I wander away to distant lands there is one spot more than all others to which my heart would turn with fond regret, and that is our dear old village church.

WINNIFRED.

Commencement of Greensboro (Ala.) Female College.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me a few lines of your valuable space simply to say that our commencement exercises have just closed with great pleasure to all parties concerned.

The commencement sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. E. Wadsworth, to a densely crowded and highly gratified audience, on Sunday night, in the Presbyterian church.

The commencement exercises on Monday reflected credit on the young ladies, whose compositions were listened to with marked attention by all present.

In the absence of Col. Joseph W. Taylor, of Tuskaloosa, the literary address before the Young Ladies' Society was delivered by Prof. Calloway, of Selma.

The cantata on Wednesday night brought out the whole strength of our town, the audience numbering not less than four hundred persons, all of whom seemed perfectly charmed with the chaste and elegant entertainment.

There seems to be a bright future before us, judging from the week's exercises; and we cannot but hope that our new enterprise, working heart in heart and hand in hand with your noble university, will send forth streams of elegant refinement which "shall make glad the city of God" in our great Southwestern country.

THOS. WARD WHITE,
President.

HOW THE GOSPEL IS SPREAD.—The Rev. George Cousins, a missionary from Madagascar, says: "It is the natives themselves who do the work in Madagascar; it is very rarely that the missionary goes first. The native is the pioneer, taking the gospel in his own hand. The soldiers do it. Sent away on government service, if they are Christians, they take the Testaments with them, and when they find themselves surrounded by heathen, and Sunday comes round, they hold service in their own families, and the heathen join them. After a year or two we get a letter at the capital saying there is a congregation formed at such a place, and they want Bibles, hymn-books, spelling-books and other things, and they want you to come and visit them, and that is the first we have heard of the church. In the same way slaves sent by their masters to mind the cattle in the wilderness follow the same plan, and originate new congregations in distant parts of the island. These are the things that have contributed to the wonderful success that has attended our mission in Madagascar."

FINE sensibilities are like wood-blues—delightful luxuries of beauty to twine around a solid, upright stem of understanding; but very poor things if, unsustained by strength, they are left to creep along the ground.

Obituaries.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes our duty to communicate to you and the many thousands who read your estimable paper the sad intelligence that our Christian brother, Dr. E. J. POELLNITZ, is no more. He was born in Marlboro, S. C., March 29, 1810. On the fifteenth of March, 1832, he was married to Miss Mary Rembert, of Sumter district, S. C., and came to Alabama in December, 1834. He was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in August, 1840, and died, at his residence near Linden, Marengo county, Ala., April 24, 1875.

To the memory of none could we pay greater tributes of due honor and eulogy than to that of our departed brother. He had many natural and acquired gifts and graces, which gave him eminent fitness and success in every relation he bore. As husband and father he made home a place of beauty and comfort, love and happiness. In the social circle he exhibited with ease and grace every trait of a true and refined gentleman. The poor and illiterate, if honorable, found him a congenial and unassuming companion, a generous benefactor and a ready counselor. The wealthy and wise, the great and noble sought his society and welcomed him to their circles. As a citizen he was loyal and patriotic. Comprehending and appreciating the interests of his country, he loved its institutions, and gave them a hearty and liberal support. As a Christian he was sound and thorough in theory, clear and emotional in experience, and exemplary in practice. He "both knew and loved the Methodist doctrine and discipline," and for many years was a faithful and energetic steward. When all the male members save himself, in his society, had fallen, he long stood alone and bravely hoisted the banner of Israel's hosts, until ordered by the great Chief to drop his mantle, sheathe his sword, and come away to the regions of peace and eternal triumph. Though much reduced by misfortune, he still cheerfully and liberally sustained the financial burdens of his church. Truly many of our itinerant brethren will ever hold him in grateful remembrance for his deeds of love shown to them. For about a year before his death he was a victim of the sorest affliction. His pains bade defiance to every remedy, and held him as by right their destined prey. But, thank God, disease, though of the heaviest kind, could only sound the depths and shock the system of his mortal frame. "Thus far," said the great Physician, "shalt thou come, and no farther." His soul gave the strongest symptoms of spiritual soundness and meetness for the great change. Often did he express to the present pastor perfect resignation to the will of God, and a strong desire to cross over the river and rest beneath the shade of the tree. He seemed to have a divine consciousness that there was no suffering for him beyond the Jordan of death. He was conscious to the last, and his death was so easy that he departed before his wife and daughter, sitting upon his bedside, knew that death had come. Thus without a struggle he rolled off the mortal coil, rose to heaven's exalted mount, where Israel's shepherd folds his sheep and spirits bask in golden day, midst fruits of nobler growth and sweeter kind.

Done by order of the Quarterly Conference, whose members bow with resignation to this dispensation of the great Head of the church, and tender their warmest sympathies and earnest prayers in behalf of the bereaved family.

HAMPDEN, REMBERT HILLS CT., Alabama Conference, May 22, 1875.

MRS. SUSAN VIRGINIA CARDEN, daughter of J. J. and Sarah E. Davidson, was born in Madison county, Miss., April 10, 1851, and died at her father's residence, near Belmont, Ala., February 16, 1875. She was happily married to Mr. Crawford Carden in December, 1873, and professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1869, of which she was a consistent member until the time of her death. Sister Carden, before her union with the church, was often noted for her remarkable piety and interest in Christianity. She was loved by all who knew her, and long will the memory of her bright, beautiful girlhood linger with her many friends. The end of such a life as Sister Carden's could not but be victorious and triumphant, adding living strength to that most sublime declaration: "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." She was a loving daughter, an affectionate sister, and a happy and devoted wife. She leaves behind a beautiful infant son. Her life was spared her just long enough to behold her first-born, and then she fell asleep in Jesus. Sister Carden was just in the bloom of womanhood when she was snatched from us. She had such a sweet and amiable disposition that one could scarcely behold her and not admire, or be with her and not love. After she was dead there was such a heavenly expression on her face that she looked as if she were dreaming. Ah, how beautiful is the death of the righteous! Her body sleeps in the quiet earth, beneath the gentle overbending trees, but her soul now basks in eternal glory.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO THE REV. M. H. JONES.

At the second Quarterly Conference for the Acton circuit, Weatherford district, Northwest Texas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, it was announced by the preacher in charge, Bro. J. P. Huise, that one of our number had fallen since the last Quarterly Conference, viz.: the Rev. Milton H. Jones, a local elder of our church; and on motion the presiding elder, Rev. T. W. Hlues, appointed a committee of three to draw up a suitable memoir. Your committee respectfully submit the following:

Whereas, It hath pleased our heavenly Father to call from labor to rest our esteemed brother and father in the gospel, the Rev. Milton H. Jones, who had for nearly forty years stood upon the walls of our Zion; and in Mississippi and in Texas, both as a travelling and local preacher, was considered one of the great leaders of the "host of Israel"—one who preached and enjoyed "perfect love," one whose every-day life was a comment on his profession; therefore,

Resolved, That while we willingly acquiesce in the ways of Divine Providence, we consider that the church, the country, his family and the community in which he lived have suffered a great loss, and we fear we shall never see his like again.

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference sympathize deeply with his afflicted family, and especially his aged widow.

Resolved, That we carry out the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference by sending a copy of these resolutions to the family, and also a copy to the New Orleans and Galveston Advocates for publication, and that a copy be spread on the journal of the Conference.

Respectfully submitted.

DEPARTED this life, near Mount Willing, Lowndes county, Ala., Mrs. RUTH JANE FEWER, daughter of James and Ellen M. Sullivan, and wife of William L. Fewer. She was born in this county, and in her youth she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. On the first of January, 1874, she was married to William L. Fewer. On the second Sunday in June she was taken sick at church, never to return there again. Her suffering was great for forty-one days, but she bore it all with patience, and without complaining or murmuring. On the twenty-fourth day of July, 1874, her spirit took its flight, at 12.55 P. M., aged twenty-two years, eleven months and six days. She was good and kind to all who knew her, and true and faithful to all the duties of the church. She was always at her Sunday school unless she was sick. She always seemed to have a heart to pray and not to faint, and was a strong believer in prayer. She was a true helpmate for her husband. The week after she was married she requested him to hold family prayer at night, and said to him: "Let us try to live right." The altar of family worship was erected, and is continued till this day. She always had the appearance of a very bright Christian, and a true lover and follower of Christ.

W. L. FEWER.

DR. J. P. RICHARDSON was born in Washington county, Ala. December 26, 1854, and died at State Line, Miss., May 28, 1875. His career as a doctor was short. He received his diploma as a doctor from the medical college in Mobile, March 31, 1875, returned to his home, spent a short time there, and went from thence to State Line to practice; but, alas! at an unexpected time the strong arm of death was laid upon him, and there was no defense. We do not grieve for him as for one who had no hope beyond this vale of tears. On the twenty-second of July, 1873, at State Line, he was converted and united with the Methodist Church. He remained a consistent member till his death. On his death-bed he left a bright testimony. The day before he died he had his Bible brought to him. He read a portion of St. Mark, and then bade his friends to sing:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

He attempted to join in with them. Afterward he had them sing: "I am going home to die no more." He then admonished his friends to meet him in heaven. May God help them take his advice. May their last words be like his.

A MORNING SONG.

I wake this morn, and all my life
Is freshly mine to live;
The future with sweet promise rife,
And crowns of joy to give.

New words to speak, new thoughts to hear,
New love to give and take;
Perchance new burdens I may bear
For love's own sweetest sake.

New hopes to open in the sun,
New efforts worth the will,
Or tasks with yesterday begun
More bravely to fulfill.

Fresh seeds for all the time to be
Are in my hand to sow,
Whereby, for others and for me,
Undreamed-of fruit may grow.

In each white daisy mid the grass
That turns my foot aside,
In each uncurling fern I pass,
Some sweetest joy may hide.

And if, when eventide shall fall
In shade across my way,
It seems that naught my thoughts recall
But life of every day.

Yet if each step in shine or shower
Be where thy footstep trod,
Then blessed be every happy hour
That leads me nearer God.

A Holy Ministry.

BY PROF. W. C. DAMON.

"Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord," has been an injunction of the first importance throughout all the history of the church of God. The church may have great wealth, and great numerical strength, and great zeal, and great resources of various kinds; but without a holy ministry all her other resources will be of little avail. Unholiness in a minister of Christ is like treason in the general of an army—in either case it will work disaster and ruin to the cause.

The minister of Christ should be holy, because he is the bearer of the water of life to thirsty souls. Pure water may be rendered impure and unwholesome by being brought in a vessel that is not clean. And so, too, the pure water of life may be spoiled for use by being presented to the people in an unclean vessel. So it will not do to say that it is the water that quenches thirst, that it is the truth that saves, no matter how or by whom presented. It does matter much both how and by whom.

Again, the minister should be a holy man, because he must be a reflector of the light and truth of the gospel. Certainly it is right to expect that in him will be exemplified all the beauties and excellencies of Christianity. But if there be sin in his heart he cannot reflect the beauty of Christ. If the windows of his soul are covered with the cobwebs of doubt, and coated with the dust of evil habit, God's pure light is never going to shine through them in such a way as to glorify Christ nor save men. Pure light is what men must have to walk by if they would hope to go aright. Because of darkness men stumble and go astray. And where pure, clear daylight is demanded, twilight will not answer. Surely the minister of Christ should occupy no doubtful ground in this regard. He should be like a city set upon a hill, a candle on a candlestick, that giveth light unto all that are in the house.

He should be holy, because he is the shepherd of the flock of Christ. As such he must lead the flock, and be an example unto them. A pastor, in order to accomplish his mission, must have the confidence of the people. If they confide in him they will follow him; and if he shall go astray, it follows that he will lead his flock astray also. Here is solemn responsibility, here is a sacred charge—to lead the flock of God, through the wilderness and the desert, up to the promised land. This is no trifling matter; this demands earnestness and faithfulness and intelligence on the part of the leader.

Suppose that Joshua had been lifted up with pride and self-assurance, and had led the people in a way of his own choosing, instead of following the guidance of the pillar of cloud and of fire. The result must have been that, instead of going over Jordan dry-shod, and instead of seeing the walls of Jericho fall down before them, he would finally have retreated before an outnumbering and victorious enemy, and the last of his people would finally have perished in the barren and thirsty desert.

And so, too, to-day the leader of God's people must give good heed to follow not the fiery and cloudy pillar, as of old, but, what is not less sure, the written word of God—the precepts and examples of the Savior, that great Chief Shepherd who hath called him to this work and ministry.

He is, we say, not only to be the leader of the flock, but an example to them in all things. Whatever would be wrong for them, single or together, to practice, would be doubly wrong for him to teach and encourage. If it is wrong for God's people to be shiftless and lazy, it is doubly wrong for his ministers to set the example. If it is hurtful for the body of the church to use extravagance and to squander money, or run in debt by living beyond their means, it is doubly sinful in the preacher to encourage such things by his example. If it would disgrace or hinder the church in its work for all its members to use wine and tobacco, then this is sufficient reason why the ministry should shun their use as a thing that God doth hate. If it is bad for a brother in the pew to become irritable and sour, and to lose his temper under trying circumstances, it is worse, far worse, for the man who stands as an example in the pulpit to be carried away by like evil influences. Be careful, ye ministers of God, for great interests are committed to your hands. Let your lives be blameless and perfect before the flock and the world, giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed. But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings, by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report, as deceiver and yet true, as unknown and yet well known, as dying and behold we live, as chastened and not killed, as sorrowful yet always rejoicing, as poor yet making many rich, as having nothing and yet possessing all things.

If the ministers of God would read these grand words of Paul every week, and pray over them, many of them would find both their usefulness and their enjoyment doubled as the result. They are eminently adapted to give the minister right views of his work, and of his relation to this present life.—Guide to Holiness, February 18, 1875.

A Baptist lady, a friend of fine culture and for many years employed in the Baptist mission in Burmah, with whom I often discussed the mode of Christian baptism, used to say to me: "If you ever visit the old ruined churches of the East you will find baptismal fonts large enough for immersion."

When I visited Ephesus my guide took me to see the ruins of the Church of St. John, which stood upon the western declivity of the hill which looks westward to the sea. Here was a vast amphitheater strewn with ruins, and just north of it are the ruins of a large church which tradition calls the Church of St. John. My guide led me to the east end of these ruins, which abut against the hill, and to a vast marble vessel which I at once recognized as the baptismal font of the Church of St. John, and I said to myself: This is worth all my labor and toil of travel of ten thousand miles to see this wonderful stone. There it stands, in the midst of rank grass and weeds and marble blocks, and other ruins strewn around. It was the most wonderful monolith of the kind I had seen in all my journey. It was hewn out of an immense block of marble. It is white, clouded with red and blue, and highly polished. It was circular, and thirteen feet in its greatest diameter. The receptacle for the water was two and a half feet wide from outside of the depression to its inside at the top. This left the elevation in the center part of the stone (which is nearly flat) about eight feet in diameter. A fountain, it seemed to me, might have played up through the center of the stone, though I did not discover the orifice, if such there was. It was three feet high, tapering down to the bottom like a vase, resting upon a solid pedestal. The pedestal was partly visible, but not enough of it to determine whether it was square or round. The font was a little canted over on one side, perhaps about ten degrees from an upright position. The massiveness and beauty of this remnant of Christian antiquity were wonderful to behold. It was perfect in all its parts, so far as I could see; no part of it was broken, and its original beautiful polish still remained, discolored somewhat by the soil and debris by which it had been mostly covered. Some excavator had dug out the soil from the upper side, so as to get a view of its formation below and of its pedestal in part.

How happens it that it has been so strangely preserved? I could account for this only by its being covered up almost entirely by the soil, and when found by the Turks it was so massive that no common or ordinary machinery could lift it out of its place. For ages the city has been plundered by the Turks; and its remains, such as could be shipped, have been carried to Constantinople. But this baptismal font was so heavy it could not be carried away. So to this day it has been left.

This font, having a receptacle for the water of only ten inches deep, suggests the impossibility of baptism therein by the mode of immersion; and, from the fact that this receptacle extends entirely around and is near the rim, it would seem that the candidates kneeled around the font, and then the administrator, standing between them and the font, dipped his hand into the water and poured it from his hand upon the head of each candidate in order. We must infer, therefore, that immersion was not the mode of baptism practiced in the Church of St. John, at Ephesus.—Rev. Dr. S. W. Vail, in the New York Methodist.

A Cardinal's Oath.

The oath which a Roman cardinal is required to take, and which, as we presume, Cardinal McCloskey has taken, commits him to the absolute supremacy of the Pope in both his pontifical and civil character. Among other things, he must swear that he "will be faithful and obedient to St. Peter, the Holy Apostolic Roman Church, and our most holy lord the Pope, and his successors;" that he "will give them any assistance in retaining, defending and recovering the Roman papacy and the regalia of Peter with all my [his] might and endeavor;" that he "will resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who shall attempt anything against them;" that he "will seek out and oppose, persecute and fight against heretics and schismatics against our lord the Pope;" that he will maintain "the constitution of the blessed Pius of 1567, and the declarations of his successors, particularly those of Innocent the Ninth, 1591, and those of Clement the Eighth, 1592;" that he will maintain the papal claims to various Italian cities; and that he "will not seek absolution from any" of the articles enumerated in his oath.

Such are some of the particulars embraced in the oath which Cardinal McCloskey has taken, committing him in the most complete and abject devotion to the Pope and his successors in office as ecclesiastical and civil potentates. It is well known that Pius the Ninth has never acquiesced in the annexation of the former States of the Church to the kingdom of Italy, that he still claims to be their temporal sovereign, and that he has placed Victor Emanuel under the ban of excommunication for having deprived him of his temporalities. Papacy in the person of the Pope has not relinquished a single one of its pretensions to the civil power. What has been lost in this respect has been lost against its consent, and with no other concurrence than that which necessity has forced. The Pope still insists that he is by right a temporal sovereign; and the cardinalate is theoretically a secular as well as a religious office, and in both aspects it acknowledges the duty of absolute allegiance to the supreme and infallible authority of the Roman pontiff.

In this view of the question, we are not a little at loss to see how Cardinal McCloskey can reconcile his official oath as a cardinal with his duties and obligations as a citizen under the constitution of the United States and of the State in which he resides. If the Pope should attempt to recover his so-called possessions from the King of Italy; if filibustering expeditions were organized in this country to aid his pontifical majesty in the effort; and if the President, as it would be his duty to do, should issue his proclamation forbidding all such organizations, what would Cardinal McCloskey do in such a contingency? Would he merge the citizen in the cardinal, and thus keep his faith with the Pope; or the cardinal in the citizen, and obey the executive authority of the United States? Would his eminence "resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who" should by force dispute the civil authority of "our most holy lord the Pope?" Would he help "in recovering the Roman papacy and the regalia of Peter with all" his "might and endeavor?" How about seeking out and opposing, persecuting and fighting against heretics and schismatics against "our lord the Pope?"—The Independent.

CONVICTED sinners sometimes resort to curious shifts in order to avoid coming into close quarters. The Rev. Mr. Altken, in the course of a recent sermon, related an incident illustrating this point. Preaching on one occasion a stirring gospel sermon, he observed an elderly gentleman with whom the Spirit of God was evidently striving. He sought conversation with him afterward, when the old gentleman confessed that the discourse had deeply interested him, but added: "I am of a very analytical turn of mind, and I should have to weigh and examine your statements before I could receive them." Then, noticing the searching look of inquiry and compassion with which he was regarded, he tremblingly repented: "I am of a very analytical turn of mind, very," and then burst into tears. "Let me call on you to-morrow," said the preacher, and an interview was arranged. When he did so he found the man completely broken down under a sense of his sinful and lost condition, and was enabled to lead him to a saving and most blissful acquaintance with the Lord Jesus. Then the old man remarked: "What a fool I was to talk to you as I did yesterday. I did not know what to say, so I made an excuse of my analytical turn of mind. What I needed was salvation."

SIZE AND HEAT OF THE SUN.—The diameter of the sun is 853,380 miles. A train which travels the earth's circumference in a month would require nine years to do so on the sun. Let a cannon ball represent the earth, and it will take 1,400,000 such balls to represent the sun; but it would require only 300,000 earths to equal the sun in weight. This gives him an excess of mass over all the known planets of the system taken together of 674 times; and therefore he is the great controlling center of every attendant world.

The intensity of the solar light cannot be adequately grasped. One hundred and forty-six balls of lime as large as the sun, intensely luminous as the lime light, would only equal his brilliance; while a calculation of his heat as represented by terrestrial combustion, in a given time, may be computed, but cannot be understood. Of the intense activities thus begotten this earth, despite the enormous energies which animate it, receives but the two hundred and twenty-seven millionth part!—London Quarterly.

Religious Intelligence.

—The total number of Sunday school scholars in the Methodist Church in Canada is 96,760.

—The first version of the Gospel of Matthew ever made into the Garo language, spoken by one of the hill tribes in Assam, is about to be issued by the Baptist mission press at Calcutta.

—A terrible massacre of Protestants on one of the Loyalty group of Islands, in the South seas, is reported. Twenty men and fourteen women were killed and horribly mutilated. Priests are said to be the instigators.

—Among the Mohammedan converts received by the Presbyterian missionaries in Persia was a soldier, who stated that two hundred men in the army thought as he did, and were holding secret meetings in regard to the Christian religion.

—A religious war seems to have broken out in England. Over one hundred apprentice boys in the employ of the engine builders, the Messrs. Stephenson, at Newcastle, were fined five shillings each for making a holiday on Ascension day.

—The second synod of the Old Catholics convened at Bonn, May 19. With the approval of the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Greek Church is to be represented at it by delegates. The German Old Catholics number 36 congregations and 17,674 members.

—Father Chiniquy, the converted priest, now of the Presbyterian Church, is laboring very successfully at Montreal. It is stated that more than two hundred persons have formally withdrawn from the Romish Church as a result of what they have heard from his lips.

—The present statistics of the Reformed (Dutch) Church in the United States are: General synod, 1; district synods, 6; classes, 41; ministers, 637; candidates for the ministry, 107; congregations, 1,355; members, 144,351; Sunday school scholars, 73,247; contributions to general and local benevolence in three years, $197,217.26.

—The Waldensian mission in Italy received 108 communicants during the past year, and has 367 candidates under instruction. It has 33 churches, and employs 87 agents, of whom 23 are pastors of congregations. The annual report speaks of a marked increase of spiritual life in Sicily and in some towns of northern Italy.

—The financial statement, for the year past, of the Missionary Union of all the Baptist churches, which held its annual meeting at Philadelphia recently, shows the receipts during the year from all sources to have been $241,970.61. There is a deficiency this year of $25,177.92, which, with an old debt, makes the balance against the treasury $52,056.72.

—Twenty clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church have left that communion and joined the Reformed Episcopalian during the past year. Three were connected with the diocese of Virginia, two with Pennsylvania, Pittsburg and Kentucky, and one each with Maryland, Tennessee, Alabama, Albany, Massachusetts, Long Island, Indiana, Colorado, Kansas, Central New York and North Carolina.

—At Oroomiah, Persia, an encouraging movement has commenced among the Jews. A young man returning from Russia, where he has received instruction from a Christian, and read the New Testament, proclaimed his views to his relatives and friends. The result was that some twenty-five families have withdrawn from the synagogue, have asked and received instructors from the Presbyterian mission, attend some of the meetings, and are searching the Scriptures for further light.

TRIUMPH OF CHRISTIANITY.—Dr. Seelye says: "There are twice as many converts to Christianity in India to-day as in the whole world at the end of the first century. After the first thousand years there were only 20 versions of the Bible; now there are 274. The first Bible society was formed in England in 1804; now there are multitudes of them, and they have printed and circulated 31,000,000 copies. In the room where Voltaire wrote his boasts that Christianity would not see the nineteenth century a Bible depository is established. Many times more Bibles are circulated and read in the nineteenth century than in all the centuries before. The history of Madagascar, 1826 to 1834, is an epitome of Christianity in the first century. When the missionaries returned, after banishment, they found 5,000 Christians as the result of Bible-reading, who had remained steadfast in spite of appalling persecutions."

—The Rev. Dr. Wylie writes from Egypt to George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia: "You will be glad to hear that the United Presbyterian mission, now the only one in Egypt, is very prosperous. Its operations are directed principally for the evangelization of the Copts, and there are now about 600 members in the churches they have organized. They have a number of flourishing schools, and a theological seminary, in which they have had twelve students, of whom six are about to be licensed. They have taught the people the duty of contributing to the support of the gospel, and during last year over $3,000 have been received, besides more than $500 paid for tuition. Over 10,000 books have been sold, of which the value is more than $2,500. But with all that has been done, the work is so vast that it seems comparatively little. The population of the country is about 5,000,000, and there is, professedly at least, full toleration for all forms of religion, and the Mohammedans, Jews, Armenians, as well as the Copts, are accessible to Christian efforts. The present ruler of Egypt is evidently desirous to introduce the civilization of European nations, and the course he is pursuing is doing much to break down the prejudices and hostility of the Mohammedans, and prepare the way of the Lord. Soon, we may hope, 'princes shall come out of Egypt,' and 'an altar be erected in the midst of the land unto the Lord.'"

Our Young People.

LITTLE THINGS.

Suppose the little flowers should think
That they are much too small
To be of any use to us,
And so not bloom at all—
How much that's pleasant we should lose;
For as we pass them by Every little flower that blooms
Is pleasing to the eye.

Suppose the little rain drops thought
That they were much too small
To be of any use on earth,
And so not rain at all—
Then the fruits would never grow,
Nor roses in the bowers;
For all the little rain-drops help
To make refreshing showers.

And so shall little children think
That they are much too small
To be of use to others here,
And do no good at all?
Ah! dearest children, think not so—
For little acts of love
Are pleasing in the sight of God,
And counted up above.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking for a long while of writing to you, and telling you how much I love the ADVOCATE, especially the Child's Corner, with its charming letters from dear Grandpa Goodale. We live near Woodville, in Wilkinson county, Miss.—rather a secluded spot away from the busy world; but my kind parents keep me supplied with books and papers suited to my years, so that, although we have no schools, I am not altogether without opportunity of improving my mind. I am only ten years old, but have been a member of the church several months, and try not to break any of the vows which I took upon me with the consent and approval of my parents. Do you think I am too young?

I was sorry to see, in the last ADVOCATE, that Grandpa Goodale had been "under the weather." I do love him so much, for I know he loves all little children. How I wish I had his photograph for my album. I am, of course, very anxious for him to tell us "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest," but it seems like it takes a long time to get to the point, though I am of the same opinion as another of your little readers—that it is all Tom's fault.

I asked mamma yesterday how spiders made their webs, and she told me to write and ask Tom, and doubtless he could tell me all about it; but I thought if I did he would use so many big words I wouldn't know any more than I do now.

I have a nice new scrap-book, and in it Grandpa Goodale's letters have a conspicuous place—that is, the most of them; but while my dear mamma, who always takes such excellent care of everything, was very ill, a few weeks ago, some of the ADVOCATES got misplaced. I regret it so much.

Well, this is as much as you will want to hear from a little girl. So good-by. Love to Grandpa Goodale.

Very truly, your little friend,

NANNIE PRESTON WOOD.

The Ice Palace.

The winter of the year 1740 was a very severe one in Russia; poverty and misery abounded in the land, and, in order to give occupation to some of the many thousands of people who were thrown out of work by the inclemency of the season, the Empress Anne planned and caused to be constructed the celebrated ice palace which was built in St. Petersburg.

It was made of the purest and most transparent ice cut out in great masses from the frozen Neva, and brought up to the building site by means of cranes and pulleys. The single blocks were worked out in the most accurate manner, and adorned with various architectural decorations; when two completed ones were to be placed upon each other water was at first poured between them, which, freezing, at once united them in a single mass. Thus the whole building seemed to be cut out of one frozen whole, and the bluish tint of the pure ice made it resemble one of those enchanted edifices carved out of a single diamond, of which we read as children in fairy tales.

The house was forty-six feet long, eighteen broad, and twenty-one high. The front was divided by pillars into compartments, in each of which was a window, the frame-work being painted green; the panes, also of ice, were as transparent and smooth as ground glass; at night they were generally lighted up from the inside, and then the whole house was illuminated by the softest pearly light. The center division looked like an entrance, and was richly decorated, the real inlets being at the back, and consisting of two moderately-sized openings, about which were grouped flowers and trees; on the latter were perched quaint-looking birds, all made of ice, and gayly painted, so as to resemble nature. The roof which surmounted the whole was flat, and surrounded by an ornamental balcony, decorated by statues standing upon low pedestals. Round the house was fixed an elaborate railing, also of ice, which inclosed a broad space for walking. In front of this inclosure stood six guns, three on each side. They were of the size of four-pounders, but, being of ice, they were only loaded with half a pound, and the balls, which consisted of pressed tow, would pierce through a board two inches thick from a distance of sixty steps without bursting the gun. On each side by a dolphin, which threw up lofty jets of naphtha at night, and so formed two beautiful fountains of fire. At both ends of the row of guns, in front of the inclosure, stood two pyramidal buildings, on each of which was painted a sun-dial. They were lighted up at night with great paper lanterns. On the left side of the house was a life-sized elephant; upon his back was a man with a battle-ax, and in front two guides in Persian costume. The elephant was hollow, and spurted from beneath his tusks, twenty-four feet into the air, by day a shower of water and by night a feathered spray of glowing naphtha. At the right side was an enormous bath, made in true Russian fashion, of round blocks of ice.

The interior of the house was divided into three compartments, viz.: a spacious ante-room and two side apartments; one of these was arranged as a bed-room, and contained, in addition to a table borne by two figures, upon which were placed every species of sweet-smelling casket and bottle, a pair of candlesticks, and candles which were dipped in naphtha, and shone at night without melting, a looking-glass, and a little clock on the wall. The bedstead was richly furnished with pillows, blankets, and a beautifully-embroidered coverlid; these were the only things in the whole palace that were not made of ice. On one side was a pretty fireplace and grate filled with ice coals, which were also dipped in naphtha, and shone brightly at night.

The second room might be called the dining-room. The most charming adornment there was a lovely clock, through the transparent case of which the whole mechanical array of wheels could be seen. On all sides were sofas and arm-chairs, and in the corners elegantly-draped figures, as of sculpture. Against the walls stood ice-cupboards, in their transparency as of glass, through which might be seen a goodly stock of dinner paraphernalia, knives, forks, spoons, drinking-cups, as well as every sort of food; all and everything was of ice; some shining brightly, others again painted with the most natural colors of the objects represented.

This wonderful work of art, the enormous cost of which could only be justified by the fact that it did good to many thousands of persons, remained from the beginning of January till the middle of the month of March, when the mild spring sun undermined its supports and slowly consumed its beauty.—Aunt Judy's Magazine.

A SILK-LINED HOUSE.—I heard two little boys down by the brook to-day talking about their fathers' houses, and boasting how grand they were. Johnny said his house had a velvet carpet in the parlor, and lace curtains at the windows. Willie said his house had splendid glass chandeliers, they sparkled like diamonds; and the walls were beautifully painted. I thought I would like to tell them about a house very much more wonderful than those they lived in, because it is builded by a small insect.

This house is made by a kind of spider that lives in California, and is called the mason-spider. His house is very marvelous for such a little fellow to make all by himself, without any hammer or saw or trowel or ax or nails or plaster, or any such things as men use in building; and yet his mansion is fit for a little queen, for it is lined throughout with white silk.

This spider's house is nearly as large as a hen's egg, and is built of a sort of red clay, almost as handsome as the brown stone they are so proud of in New York city. It is cylindrical in shape. The top opens with a little trap-door, which is fastened with a hinge, and shuts of itself. The door and inside are lined with the most delicate white silk, finer than the costliest dress ever worn by a lady.

Mr. Spider builds his house in some crevice, or bores a cylindrical hole in the clay, so that all is concealed from view except this tiny trap-door. When he sees any enemy approaching he runs quickly to his silk-lined house, swings open the little door, goes in, and, as the door shuts tightly after him, holds it firmly by placing his claws in two openings in the white silk lining of the door, just large enough to admit his little hands or feet, which ever you choose to call them; and here, nestled in this luxurious retreat, he bids defiance to all intruders.

I heard all about this spider from a gentleman who had been to California, and had brought home one of these red clay, silk-lined houses. He was showing it to some children as they were walking near me. I wish you all could have seen it.—"Jack in the Pulpit," St. Nicholas.

JUST GOING TO.—"I suppose you mailed my letter in time, Bob," said his father.

"N-n-o-o sir," he answered. "I was just going to run over to the office with it, and the stage drove off."

"Then I must send a telegram; and that will cost several dollars."

"I am so sorry," said Bob; "I will try to be more prompt next time."

But one day soon after, when he was coming home from the mill, he stopped to see Rodney Brown's gray squirrel.

"Your horse seems a little restless," said Mrs. Brown, opening the window; "had you not better fasten him to the post?"

"Yes'm, I was just going back to tie him," said Bob. But at this moment a bit of white paper fluttered over the ground; the horse took fright and ran down the street, breaking the wagon and losing most of the flour. "Oh, dear!" said Bob, "I wish I had started a little sooner." That was the way with him most of the time; he was a little late at table, at school and at church; and people soon began to see that he could not be trusted to do errands.

What kind of a man will the boy make who is only "just going to" do things; and, worst of all, isn't there danger that poor tardy Bob will perhaps be just a little too late in giving his heart to the dear Savior?—Congregationalist.

Centenary College.

Since we were at the commencement, two years ago, some improvements have been made. One of the wings has been covered anew, the campus has been inclosed with a good plank fence, and the brickbats and other debris about the center building have been removed. The interior has received some repairs, but the plaster has fallen in many places from the ceiling and cornices of the spacious chapel, detracting much from the beauty of this splendid auditorium. Bro. Keller's devices for remedying the acoustic defects have been successful to a considerable extent. There is certainly less echo, and there seemed to be little difficulty in hearing. Those long wings, with their columns and galleries and abundant openings, would be imposing but for the scars which time has made upon them. They sadly need repair, and any one who has artistic taste, love for Christ, and money, can hardly look at them without being irresistibly moved to make the needed donation. A few thousand dollars—probably $5,000—would repair the wings, restore the interior of the center building, and make this about the completest and most beautiful mass of college architecture in the country. We never wished so much to be rich as when we looked upon this magnificent property as it stood eloquently appealing for that which would give the finishing touches to its handsome structures.

On Sunday morning, the eleventh instant, the annual commencement sermon was preached in the college chapel by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. The assembly was large and the sermon appropriate. At night the Methodist church was well filled, and Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, of the Mississippi Conference, preached a sermon full of gospel meat, at the close of which several persons presented themselves as candidates for church membership. The exhibition of the Preparatory Department on Monday night, and that of the literary societies on Tuesday night, were excellent. The speaking was good almost without exception, and greatly in advance of that which we heard from the same platform two years ago. It has not probably been much excelled during the generation through which the history of the college extends.

The meeting of the Alumni Association on Tuesday, at eleven A. M., was an occasion of more than usual interest. The audience was not as large as it should have been, but those who came enjoyed a treat such as is rarely afforded. Col. Norwood presided, and opened the meeting, after prayer by Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, by a few appropriate words. President Andrews made quite an extended address, and then came the oration by Judge J. G. Kilbourne, of Clinton, La. In matter and manner it had all the elements of excellence. It was a masterpiece in its way, humorous, descriptive, brilliant and instructive. As the address is to be published, we hope to give our readers a taste of it hereafter. Judge Kilbourne was followed by brief impromptu speeches by Dr. Walker and Col. D. C. Hardee. Col. Hardee, claiming to be an outsider, was elected an honorary member of the association—a well-merited compliment to one who has been for many years one of the most active and generous friends of the college. Next year we hope the alumni will be present in full force. This annual reunion may not only be made an occasion of great interest, but it will prove of great service to the welfare of the college.

The commencement exercises on Wednesday were brief, but every way agreeable and entertaining. As there were no graduates this year, we missed the president's usual thoughtful and impressive baccalaureate. Three of the older students delivered well-prepared speeches: T. S. Jones on Affectation; C. W. Barrier on The Fluctuations of Literature; C. Kilbourne on Who is My Neighbor? Rev. C. W. Carter, who had been elected to address the literary societies, was not able to attend. Dr. Walker, however, who always goes prepared for any emergency, supplied the place, and read an admirable address on True Manliness. May its lessons of wisdom and piety be long remembered by the throngs of young people who were privileged to hear it. A few pertinent remarks from Bishop Keener, president of the board of trustees, the benediction, a long blast from the band, and the multitude dispersed.

At the meeting of the board of trustees the following members were present: Bishop J. C. Keener, president, Rev. James A. Godfrey, secretary, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, Rev. Dr. W. H. Watkins, Col. D. C. Hardee, John H. Keller, Rev. J. L. Forsyth, Rev. C. G. Andrews, Josiah D. Nettles, Rev. J. C. Miller, Rev. L. Parker.

Eighty-nine students have been in attendance during the year. The examining committee reported the examinations to have been very thorough and satisfactory, and exhibiting a decided advance upon the past four years. Mr. T. J. Kernan, principal of the Preparatory Department, has filled his post faithfully and acceptably. President Andrews, and Profs. G. H. Wiley and A. R. Holcombe, are entitled to the highest commendations for the manner in which they have performed their arduous and responsible duties. The college and the country have, we believe, passed through their severest trials. With the promise of better times ahead, the future of Centenary grows brighter, and its permanent success may be regarded as assured.

Our Week of Prayer.

This begins on Sunday, August 8. The special objects which the Bishops have indicated are missions and institutions of learning. In fact the week will be devoted to special religious services, protracted meetings will be inaugurated, and we hope revivals will follow in many places, if not throughout the church. One service of preaching and prayer, given to each of the objects mentioned, would be enough; then the Sunday school might have a day, and in all the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the people should be sought.

The subject of missions will, of course, be made prominent. There should be full statements of our missionary work, a survey of the fields occupied, facts connected with their history, and the pressing need of liberal contributions for their support. We cannot pray for our missions intelligently and to much purpose without information concerning their history and operations. Prayer is a mighty force in the conversion of the world. It is connected with the material means and agencies. It is calculated to awaken a deeper interest in the church, and to inspire a spirit of liberal giving. If we can get the people to praying they will be likely to bring offerings along with their prayers. The inconsistency, the shamefulness of asking God to bless a cause to which we have not contributed, will be apparent to the most covetous. Money will come into the treasury in answer to prayer, and an increased concern for the conversion of the world will be awakened.

But besides this the success of missions, after the means and men are abundantly secured, depends upon the blessing of God in his providence and grace. Here prayer acts directly and is essential. God giveth the increase. The Holy Spirit must attend the word preached, and all means will be in vain without his powerful and quickening operations. At this point we are to cry importunately to God that the arm of the Lord may awake, and that he who dwells between the cherubim may shine forth. Let us endeavor to realize the situation of an unconverted world and the relation of responsibility which we sustain to it. Let us pray as our brethren in the heart of China, Brazil and Mexico pray, and as if we were there with them, and wrestling hand to hand with the corruptions, superstitions and misery which surround them. There will be occasion for self-examination and confession. Many will find that praying for missions is to them a new business, that there is lack of feeling, and almost nothing in the way of exact information upon which to base their petitions. As a church we are guilty, verily guilty, concerning our brother. We have restrained prayer before God, we have kept back the tithes, our hearts have not felt the constraining love of Christ. There are enough sins of omission in connection with missions to occupy one whole Friday as a day of fasting and humiliation.

Our institutions of learning are mentioned in connection with missions. Herein the Bishops have exhibited their high estimate of sanctified education. Our schools are vital to the welfare of the church, and important auxiliaries in the work of Christ. Our highest interests, political, social and ecclesiastical, are promoted by them. Catholicism is working its most mischievous perversions, and making its chief aggressions through its schools. There are found Protestants, and even Methodists, who, from motives of convenience or economy, sacrifice their children by sending them to Catholic schools. Infidelity in various forms, and a Christless philosophy are propagating their destructive errors through their schools. Our young men trained in the atmosphere of Harvard, or of the German and French universities, are brought under the influence of modern doubt, and often become confirmed skeptics. If we would save our young people from Romanism and infidelity we must give them the most liberal scholastic advantages in connection with the purest influences and teachings of the gospel. As related to other evangelical denominations, we must have our own seminaries and colleges if we would retain our sons and daughters within our own communion. The strength of Methodism is in her schools almost as much as in her doctrines and polity. We cannot hold our own without them.

They are therefore to be prayed for. We would especially pray that our people may have the grace and good sense to patronize their own institutions, that they may devise liberal things in their support and endowment, and that they may attain to a true appreciation of their importance to the welfare of the church. We should pray especially for the work of grace among the students, that Christ may be made known in the work of faith with power, and that the Holy Ghost may fall upon them. Our presidents, professors and teachers should also be specially remembered at the throne of grace. As a class, they are Christian men and women, devoted to Christ, laboring hard and conscientiously, and but moderately compensated for their toil. They are entitled to our prayers, they need them, they will be grateful for them.

With these special objects distinctly set forth, let our faith, praise, confessions, crystallize about them, while we go beyond and seek for a baptism personal, local, universal and all-embracing. During the week of prayer let the people gather in the churches, let the home altar send up a thicker and more fragrant incense, and let the sick pray upon their beds. In our journeying let silent prayer go up, and in our closets let us wrestle with God for a blessing.

OUR RECENT TRIP to Jackson was a very pleasant one. We had Dr. Walker along, and of course our time on the steamboat passed quickly and agreeably enough. Bro. J. H. Keller and his excellent wife were also of our company, and contributed much toward lightening the expense and enhancing the social enjoyment of the excursion. Bro. Keller gave $1,000 last year to the college, and at one of the most perplexing passages in the deliberations of the board, at its late meeting, another $100 came in like a sunbeam into a dark place.

The William S. Pike is a boat we can recommend—attentive service, considerate officers, and preachers always at half fare. We returned on the Gov. Allen, John G. Benson, master, and John C. Baker in the office. On her we had no occasion to open our wallet at all. A friend had stepped in before us, and we could learn nothing more on the subject. Dr. Walker and the editor were resigned, as they always hope to be under such inscrutable dispensations. Even at full fare we should have spoken well of the Gov. Allen. We love the name, and besides she is a floating palace—elegant, comfortable, and officered by gentlemen prudent and capable.

While in the country we heard much of the fine crops, and saw something of them. The coast from New Orleans up to Bayou Sara is a sea of greenness, covered with a luxuriant growth of corn, sugar-cane and rice. In the interior corn and cotton were generally looking well, and fruits and vegetables were abundant. The prospects of a bountiful harvest have put new life into the people, and hope and cheerfulness prevail.

Jackson is in one of the most beautiful upland countries in the South—a region of undulating surfaces, of hills and valleys, of ravines dark and cool with clambering vines and the shade of beeches and magnolias, of clear-flowing creeks and upper and nether springs, of grand forest-trees, and noble men and women.

The beauty of the country, nowhere more charming than immediately about the college, is in itself a chair of æsthetics in the educational advantages of the institution.

During our sojourn in Jackson we were domiciled in the pleasant home of Prof. G. H. Wiley. To him and to his excellent wife and household we are under lasting obligations. And what more shall we say? The time would fail to tell of the good people we met, the bountiful dinners, the feasts of reason and flow of soul, the abounding hospitality. But we must not fail to mention President Andrews' ponies, the moonlight ride, reaching to midnight, from Bayou Sara to Jackson, and how Master John Ware, one of the college boys, and son of our old friend, Mr. Henry Ware, drove us thither with all safety; and how Master Edward Richardson, another college boy, handled the ribbons deftly on our return. Many thanks to these young gentlemen for their good company and faithful services. May they live long and prosper.

Commencement Exercises of Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

GREENSBORO

is located on the Selma, Marion and Memphis railroad, about forty miles to the Northwest of Selma, which gives it free and ready communication with the rest of the world. It has a population of say fifteen hundred inhabitants. The liquor prohibition extends five miles every way from the college building. Its inhabitants are intelligent, hospitable and refined—a people of the "first water." "It is beautiful for situation," if it is not the joy of the whole earth. I take it to be as healthy a place, from its appearance and surroundings, as can be found west of the Alabama river and south of the mountains. It is a city of sunshine and shades. The dwellings are well back from the streets, and nearly every yard is a beautiful park of native oaks, sycamore, elms, etc., with a lawn of green grass "as soft as downy pillows are." The width of the streets gives it sunshine—the beautiful trees make the shades.

THE SERMON

was preached by Dr. M. S. Andrews, of Selma, which I did not hear, but learned from those who did hear it that it was a perfect success—fully up to the demands of the occasion, and every way worthy of a man of such acknowledged ability. His subject was the Holy Spirit. The sermon was practical, spiritual, and the subject treated in a masterly way.

BELLES LETTRES SOCIETY.

On Monday night the Belles Lettres Society had its exhibition. There were four addresses by members of the society, all creditable, and with the aid of the music the night passed off pleasantly.

ADDRESSES.

On Tuesday morning at half-past ten the addresses before the literary societies and the annual address to the alumni were delivered—the first by Mr. McFarland, of Tennessee, and the other by Mr. Jordan, of Columbus, Miss. Mr McFarland's speech was excellent. The annual address by Mr. Jordan was well prepared, delivered from manuscript, and met with general applause. The speaker ignored too much the utilitarian idea of education to meet my Anglo-Saxon views; otherwise I cordially indorsed it. The utilitarian idea is the Anglo-Saxon idea of education, and through this idea the Anglo-Saxon race will ultimately subdue the world, and plant the standards of democracy and religion in the "regions beyond" and on its uttermost boundaries.

THE CLARIOSOPHIC

exhibited on Tuesday night, with its four orators and appropriate music. The subjects were well selected, the speeches carefully prepared and admirably delivered. All honor to the Clariosophic!

THE COMMENCEMENT DAY.

On Wednesday, at half-after ten in the morning, we assembled in the large, spacious hall or chapel to witness the final exercises of the occasion. There were seven graduates, and eight degrees conferred. It was a class of noble young men. They go forth fully competent to enter any of the avocations of life with every prospect of success.

ACTION OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The board elected, by unanimous voice, Luther M. Smith, of Oxford, Ga., president of the university, and have assurances that he will accept. He was represented as a finished scholar and Christian gentleman, with the very best administrative qualities. A Bishop of our church, who knows more about Oxford than most men do, said that Dr. Smith was the best president that Oxford had ever had. Under his administration that institution had the largest patronage it has had since the war, and its finances were kept in a better condition. Profs. Moore and Casey are so well and favorably known that it is not necessary to say more of them than that they are still in their respective chairs. Prof. Mitchell is a young man in charge of the scientific department. He is the son of Dr. Mitchell, one of the fathers of the Alabama Conference, and is known throughout the bounds of the Southern Church as an educator and divine, and it seems the son has already caught the fire of the sire, and is truly to the "manor born." He is a young man of ability, and has proven himself to be a worthy successor of the illustrious professors that have filled this chair before him.

With Dr. Smith at the head of this institution, with the prestige, fame and ability he brings, and the able corps of professors, who for the most part have helped to make every line of its history, we may predict for the Southern University a more glorious future than she has yet enjoyed—with all her past usefulness—and entertain the hope that it may one day be said of her, as it was of ancient Corinth, that she is the eye of all the South for learning.

WM. A. EDWARDS.

It is with deep regret that we learn of the suspension from the ministry of Rev. John W. Hanner, D. D., of the Tennessee Conference. The final disposal of the case is with the Conference, and we should not now refer to the matter but for the fact that the affair has already attained wide publicity. The following is the finding of the committee, as reported in the Nashville Union and American of July 11:

The committee of investigation, called by Bishop McTyeire in the case of the Rev. J. W. Hanner, Sr., met in Murfreesboro, at ten o'clock A. M., July 9, in the Methodist church. Committee: Rev. H. Rivers, D. D., Revs. L. C. Bryan, W. H. Hughes, J. R. Plummer and J. D. Barbee.

The witnesses were examined, after which the accused was given opportunity to speak for himself, and to explain an anonymous letter, the authorship of which was attributed to him, said letter being the basis of the charge of immorality.

The committee deliberated until eleven o'clock P. M. on Friday, and resumed their session at nine A. M. on Saturday, and at twelve o'clock they reached and signed their conclusion, of which the following is the sum:

"The committee called in the case of J. W. Hanner, Sr., have investigated the same with painful and conscientious diligence, and with prayerful reference to their responsibilities to God and his church. They have not been unmindful of the eccentricities that have marked the accused for some years, but which have not been deemed of sufficient gravity and significance to call for formal discipline. His peculiarities have been considered in explanation and mitigation, and are not without weight in estimating some things said and done by him. The frankness and honesty of his confessions and explanations before the committee duly impressed their minds and hearts. Important evidence was given by the accused against himself, while he protests his innocence of certain intentions, and would have certain things explained as quizzing and enigmatical only.

"But the committee could not escape the conclusion, from the evidence before them, that John W. Hanner, Sr., is not only guilty of what is improper and reprehensible in the highest degree in a Christian man and a minister, but that his conduct in this affair deserves the formal verdict: That he is guilty of immorality in writing a letter to a young lady, dated June 25, apparently designed to corrupt her, and to seduce her from the path of virtue, and couched in terms intimating a readiness to be the instrument of her ruin."

Whereupon the Bishop pronounced the suspension of John W. Hanner, Sr., from the ministerial office until the next session of the Tennessee Annual Conference.

THE Rev. E. E. Hoss, says the Western Methodist, who went from the Holston Conference, two years ago, to the Pacific coast, we notice, has been called by Bishop Marvin to supply the pulpit of Mount Vernon church, Washington city, which has been vacated by Rev. A. W. Wilson on account of ill health. Our San Francisco confrere says, July 2: "Bro. Hoss left this city June 21, with his family, and ere this has reached his new home. For the past year he has occupied the chair of logic, rhetoric and English literature in Pacific Methodist College, and has won the regard of the students, the confidence of the faculty and the good will of patrons. His resignation from the chair is a loss. We wish him unbounded prosperity in his new and responsible position."

REV. CHARLES COLLINS, D. D., a member of the Memphis Conference, and president of the State Female College, located near Memphis, Tenn., died July 10. It is only about two weeks ago that we received a letter from Dr. Collins. How suddenly comes the summons! Dr. Collins was pure, good and great. His death is a serious loss to the church, and especially to her educational force. The Western Methodist gives the following particulars of his illness and death:

Dr. Collins became ill during the commencement exercises of the State Female College; but, as the work usually incumbent upon him on occasions of that kind seemed to demand his attention, he continued at his post, hoping that even without rest and medicine his constitution would be able to resist the inroads of disease; and so he hoped for some time after pressing duties had ceased to make their demands upon him. Only a week before his death did he realize the severity and danger of the disease (flux) which was preying upon his strong frame and threatening his life. After that time he grew worse day by day, and notwithstanding the best skill of eminent physicians, and the loving, untiring attentions of wife, son and other relatives and friends, he died on Saturday afternoon last, July 10, his children, who had all been absent except one, arriving at home just at the hour of his departure. He died in great peace, having assured his wife that his whole trust was in Christ, and that he was ready, through the merits of the Savior, to go hence, if such should be God's will; and in dying, the power of speech having been lost, a sweet smile and heavenly illumined his countenance, and left its impress there after the soul had escaped from its earthly tenement and entered the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

An Example Worthy of Imitation.

We feel assured that Bro. Hawkins will excuse us for inserting the following note:

HAVANA, ALA., June 3, 1875.

REV. R. J. HARP—Dear Brother: ——, Havana, Ala., sends you $2.50 to pay for the ADVOCATE one year. I send it in registered letter.

He is about seventy years of age, quite feeble, with none to help him except an afflicted wife and daughter; yet he says he cannot do without his ADVOCATE, and when he brings me his subscription money he also brings envelope and postage to pay its way to New Orleans—an example worthy to be imitated by others. If this good old man can find ways and means to supply his family with a good religious paper, shame upon some who are young and worth thousands, but yet are too poor to take the ADVOCATE.

G. HAWKINS.

The thoughtfulness of our venerable and afflicted subscriber at Havana in paying the expenses of his remittances affords "an example" that we trust will be followed by some others. In a few instances we have received remittances from subscribers themselves with $2, "less twenty cents for registering." The twenty cents is not much to them or to us if it occurred but one time; but that amount deducted from each yearly subscription would amount to nearly eighteen hundred dollars per year. Most of the preachers bear this expense themselves, which they might not to do, and we do not ask them to do it. It is only because it has not occurred to our subscribers that our subscription price for one year is $2.50 here at the office that more of them have not thought to save their pastors this expense.

PUBLISHER.

DEATH OF A MINISTER'S WIFE.—We were surprised and saddened, a few days ago, by the intelligence of the death of Mrs. M. H. Lane, wife of Rev. Patrick Lane, of the Louisiana Conference. Sister Lane was an estimable and gifted Christian lady. Her bereaved husband and son have our deepest sympathy in their great sorrow. A friend furnishes us the following brief notice of Sister Lane's death:

Mrs. Martha Herbert Lane, wife of Rev. P. Lane, departed this life in Baton Rouge, at 9.15 P. M. on Friday, July 2, 1875, aged forty-four years, seven months and five days. The record of her life is with God, who readeth aright, and her excellencies are approvingly remembered by many friends. Christian womanliness is her monument, good deeds her eulogy, redemption in Christ her glory, and the new name and the crown of life her everlasting reward.

MADISON, IND., is in the midst of a revival that is said to have no parallel in its past history. Over seven hundred and fifty souls have professed conversion, the great majority of them young men and young women. Some two weeks ago a few young men of the Young Men's Christian Association went to that city to hold a convention, expecting to remain about three days. The work commenced at once, and has been growing in interest from day to day. Open-air meetings are held two or three times each day, as no church can contain the multitudes that assemble.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

A MAN may buy gold too dear.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondence can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La	$2 50
Nov. 16, 1871—From Canton, Miss	2 00
June 18, 1875—From W. B. Stringer	2 50
June 11, 1875—From Selma, Ala	5 00
Nov. 21, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Nov. 27, 1874—From John Walker, New Iberia	4 00
Dec. 3, 1871—From Jas. Williams, Isney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 16, 1875—From C. C. Manning	6 10
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

MR. LOUIS COOK, proprietor of the John Street Carriage Works, Cincinnati, O., is well known to dealers and others as one of the largest manufacturers in the West. He employs over one hundred men in his manufactory, and turns out both cheap and expensive work. Orders for any style of vehicle promptly filled. For particulars read his advertisement.

THE PURCHASING AGENCY of H. D. Rogers & Co., of Cincinnati, O., has been in successful operation for a number of years. Parties wishing to order goods would do well to consult them, as their facilities are unsurpassed for attending to this business. Quotations furnished on application. See their card.

CARRIAGES.—The large establishment of F. F. Hummel, manufacturer of carriages, buggies, etc., is advertised in the paper of to-day. Parties wishing to purchase can suit themselves in a first-class, expensive piece of workmanship, or can buy a good, substantial, carriage or buggy at a moderate price.

THE ATTENTION of superintendents of Sabbath schools and others is called to four new music-books lately issued by Messrs. John Church & Co., of Cincinnati. Specimen copies mailed on receipt of thirty cents. See advertisement on this page for further particulars.

MR. LOUIS HOMANN, of Cincinnati O., makes a specialty of models for inventors and others. In procuring a patent for an invention or in canvassing for orders much depends on the model. This should be built with studied care and neatness. Every bolt or seam should be faithfully represented, and the whole well proportioned. It is evident to every one that this can be best done by any one who has made a special study of such things. Mr. Homann has also a full line of telegraph instruments. For particulars see his advertisement.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.—This college for young ladies is located at Brookhaven, Miss., one hundred and twenty-eight miles from this city. It is under the control of Rev. H. F. Johnson, the president, and an efficient corps of teachers. It is one of the best schools for young ladies we know of. The next session begins September 22, 1875. For catalogue and terms address the president.

DALTON FEMALE COLLEGE.—The advertisement of the above-named institution will be found elsewhere. Bro. Rogers is an educator of much experience and undoubted ability, and we have no doubt that the college over which he now presides is equal to those institutions in which we have witnessed the fruits of his capacity with so much pleasure.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY.—We are glad to learn that the above-named institution is prospering under the judicious management of Rev. John A. B. Jones and his excellent wife. They are worthy of success and worthy of confidence, and we heartily commend to the attention of our readers the advertisement in another column.

NONPAREIL MILLS.—We call attention to the advertisement, headed as above, in to-day's paper. Ten different sizes of these mills are made for grinding corn, bones, drugs, etc. An illustrated pamphlet will be sent free by the proprietors, Messrs. Sedgeleer, Shepard & Miller, Cincinnati, O.

AS THE Centennial is approaching, and the warm weather is already here, it is in order to buy the Centennial Fan, for which Mr. C. T. Woodrow, 115 West Fifth street, Cincinnati, O., is the sole agent. See his card.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the card of Otto Zeil, general engraver, Cincinnati, O. Mr. Zeil manufactures the book-binders' stamp cutter, and does all work in his line as engraver.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

The chief care of the farmer, the present month, is to counteract the effects of drought. Most of us are very short-sighted, looking to present riddance from trouble, and having little regard for what the future may bring forth. To illustrate: A piece of land, grown up in sedge or old-field pine, is to be brought into cultivation. The grass or leaves, or other trash present, is very much in the way of plowing it. The plow must frequently be stopped and cleaned off, and still, after the plowman has done his best, the surface is left so rough that a smoother or harrow has to be run over it, and possibly the plowing and smoothing repeated several times before the land can be gotten in order. But all this trouble at the start can be gotten rid of promptly, without labor and without cost, by the magic of fire. Nature's beneficent accumulations of perhaps a score of years are in a few minutes changed into gases and driven off into the atmosphere, a little ashes being all that is left upon the soil; and an accusing conscience drives the owner into the theory that the ashes are worth more than all the matter from which the ashes came. But mark the result: In a few years the land loses its open, porous nature, runs together after every hard rain, absorbs and retains but a small fraction of the water which falls upon it, suffers terribly from drought, and ceases to be productive. And then the short-sighted farmer begins to think about improving it by turning under green crops. The moral of our tedious story is that it is impossible, in July, to do all that should be done to counteract a July drought. The farmer must look years and months ahead—husband all the vegetable matter originally in the soil, and replenish it by judicious rotation—must plow deep and thoroughly during the winter and early spring months; and, having done this, he may then do something to help, even in July, when the summer heat comes upon our fields, as if great convex lenses or burning glasses were suspended over them.

Frequent shallow plowings and flat culture are the means now to be used to prevent the soil from becoming excessively dry. Evaporation is proportioned to surface. If land is in high ridges or beds it would obviously take a longer line to measure the distance between two fixed points, if the line conformed to the inequalities of surface, than if stretched upon a flat surface. And the extent of surface in the one case would exceed that in the other in the same ratio that the one line exceeded the other. Flat culture—in other words, low ridges—presents, accordingly, less surface for evaporation, and to that extent retards it.

Keeping the surface finely pulverized (the work of frequent shallow plowings) contributes, if anything, still more to the retention of the moisture of the soil. That a soil plowed just after a rain will take much longer to dry off than one unplowed is a fact known to the most unobservant. The pulverized portion acts like a mulch, prevents the escape of moisture from below upward, but permits the vapor in the atmosphere to enter freely and become condensed on account of comparative coolness of the soil during the hours of night. At times the last-mentioned source of moisture becomes a very important one. Wide-cutting implements, then—such as sweeps, cultivators or harrows—should be kept constantly running, breaking the crust and destroying weeds and grass as soon as they germinate.

TURNIPS.

Too early yet to plant any variety but the Rutabagas; but it is none too early to begin preparation of land for this crop. When the time comes to plant the seed the soil ought to be perfectly clean—no undecomposed weeds or grass mixed with it—and in the finest possible tilth. The latter is absolutely essential to the growth of a large crop. A rather light, sandy soil is the best for the turnip, and the richer the better. The old-fashioned plan of cow-penning a turnip patch, where practicable, is as good as any, if not the best. Plow well, selecting a rather dry time, before turning stock upon it. Every week or ten days plow again (cross)—never plow when the ground is "heavy"—and just before the time to plant run a smoother and harrow as often as may be necessary to pulverize thoroughly. Lay off shallow drills two and one-half feet apart, put in superphosphate at the rate of two hundred and fifty pounds per acre, and bed up—not very high. At planting-time run a scantling (rigged with shafts,) to cut off the top and freshen the surface; do this just after a rain or late in the afternoon. Make a shallow drill by running a light wheel with a V-shaped edge along the freshened ridge, drill the seed and cover by running the scantling lightly over the beds again to cover, and at the same time "firm" the soil, something like a roller. This "firming" is essential to the germinating of the seed if the weather is dry.—Southern Cultivator.

Something About Soups.

A correspondent sent us some time ago an account of Prof. Blot's manner of making soup. The recent death of Prof. Blot gives it especial interest. He was earnestly engaged in the attempt to teach our people a better and more economical use of food than is generally practiced, and his loss is greatly to be regretted.

"Pot-au-feu.—Six pounds of fresh beef (ribs, knuckles or loin) in a crockery kettle, with five quarts of cold water, salt and a little pepper, on a slow fire. Take off the scum carefully when it rises. Add two white onions, with one clove in each, a small parsnip, a carrot, two middle-sized turnips, half a head of celery, two leeks, two sprigs of parsley, one of thyme, a clove of garlic, a bay leaf and a little caramel to color it. Simmer five or six hours. Dish the meat with the parsnips, turnips and leeks around it, to be served warm after the soup or kept for the next day. Strain the broth, skim off the fat at the top, put back on a good fire, and at the first boiling pour on crotons in the soup-dish and serve."

Thus endeth the professor's receipt. Observe, firstly, that you must use a "crockery kettle"—that is, some good soup kettle. Many are the husbands who expect as good home-made soup as they get at first-class restaurants, and many are the discouraged wives who would gladly cook to please their husbands, but who neither of them dream that anything better than a common iron kettle is necessary in which to make nice soup. So nine times in ten the soup is more or less flavored with iron. Prof. Blot always says "a crockery kettle" or "stew-pan" when he mentions the utensil for cooking any dish, meaning the glazed or enameled ware. Marion Harland tells us never to cook onions in an iron kettle. Observe, secondly, that you are to simmer your soup "for five or six hours." To simmer is to boil gently, yet the boiling should not cease for a moment during those five or six hours. Observe, thirdly, that you must skim off all of the fat. Many people imagine that the melted tallow gives richness to the soup, but all the best cooks agree in saying: "Take off all the fat;" and so, I think, says every educated stomach.—American Agriculturist.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR CHINA.—The Boston Journal of Chemistry gives the following very excellent practical advice for the treatment of China and glassware, which we copy for the benefit of our young lady readers, some of whom, as we know by experience, make sad havoc, though unintentionally, with the crockery.

In a common dinner service it is a great evil to make the plates too hot, as it invariably cracks the face on the surface, if not the plate itself. We all know the result—it comes apart. "Nobody broke it," "it was cracked before," or "cracked a long time."

The fact is, when the glaze is injured, every time the "things" are washed the water gets to the interior, swells the porous clay, and makes the whole fabric rotten. In this condition they will also absorb grease; and when exposed to further heat the grease makes the dishes brown and discolored.

If an old, ill-used dish be made very hot indeed, a teaspoonful of fat will be seen to exude from the minute fissures on its surface. These remarks apply particularly to common wares.

As a rule, warm water and a soft cloth are all that is required to keep glass in good condition; but water-bottles, in order to keep them bright, must be rinsed out with a little muriatic acid, which is the best substance for removing the "fur" which collects in them. This acid is far better than ashes, sand or shot, for the ashes and sand scratch glass, and if any shot is left in by accident the lead is poisonous.

Richly cut glass must be cleansed and polished with a soft brush, upon which a very little fine chalk or whiting is put; by this means the luster and brilliancy are preserved.

PRESERVING MANURE.—The Boston Journal of Chemistry states that the sources of loss in the storage are two: First, the escape of volatile ammonia and other gases; and, secondly, the loss of valuable salts by leaching. The first difficulty may be obviated by covering the excrement with eight or ten inches of good soil or loam, which will absorb all escaping gases. A bushel or so of plaster may be advantageously scattered over the heap before the soil is thrown on. The whole mass should be perfectly covered, leaving no "chimney" for gaseous exudation. The danger of leaching may be avoided by covering the heap with hay or straw sufficiently thick to shed most of the rain. If kept in this way a sufficient time the manure will undergo spontaneous decomposition, the products of which will be ready for immediate assimilation by plants. The usual process is carting manure to the fields in the autumn, to waste, by both the above processes, some of their most valuable constituents.

LADY BURDETT COUTTS has been suggesting, through the Echo, that more use might be made of goats than is now done in England for the supply of milk. Goats are among the hardiest of creatures, and their milk, if used fresh, is almost undistinguishable from that of the cow. Every morning and afternoon flocks, heavy with milk, are driven into Naples, and day after day one may see goats mounting the stairs in high houses of the city, followed by their driver, the milkman, who will stop at the door of the "flat" of each customer, and there and then milk the goat "into his own jug." In Greece all the people from the Turkish frontier, to the south of the Morea, use in great part cheese made from goat's milk, and goats provide the sustenance, both of meat as well as of milk, of hundreds of thousands of people in southern Europe and northern Africa.

A GOOD pudding sauce for some kinds of pudding is made with butter and sugar stirred till it is light. A piece of butter as large as a hen's egg for one large cup of sugar is about right. Another: One pint of boiling water, one cup of sugar, butter size of a walnut, one tablespoonful of flour; stir the flour with a little water to keep it smooth, then put it in the boiling water and sugar. Flavor with nutmeg or cinnamon.

THE corn crop of the United States for 1874 is reported by the Agricultural Department at slightly more than eight hundred millions of bushels. This is a reduction of one hundred and twenty millions from the corn crop of 1873, which was itself "not a good year for corn."

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1872.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

Scientific.

—Mr. George Smith has discovered, among the Assyrian tablets in the British Museum, the legend of the building of the Tower of Babel. This discovery is quite as important as that of the tablet relating to the deluge, made known last year by the same gentleman.

—A patent has been taken out for an invention by which it is claimed that glass can be used as a building material for house fronts, floors or pavements, superior to marble in durability and economy. It can be made plain or variegated, and its colors are indestructible.

—In lecturing on electricity at the Royal Institution recently Prof. Tyndall made his assistant rub his back with a good-sized fox-brush, while he stood on four tumblers. The result was that Dr. Tyndall became so charged with electricity that his hand emitted sparks, and attracted the electrometer presented to it.

—Vaseline is the name given to a new petroleum product obtained by distilling the crude oil and filtering the residue through animal charcoal. It is a jelly-like substance, free from odor and taste, and becoming liquid at 93° Fahrenheit. It is proposed to use it in medicine as an emollient and a vehicle for disagreeable mixtures.

—The Europeans, it seems, are not to be outdone by the Americans in the matter of great telescopes. Since the successful construction by Mr. Clark of the big refractor for the Washington Observatory a thirty-inch object glass has been begun for the observatory at Paris, and one of the same dimensions for that of Vienna.

—A method of cutting steel rails, recently introduced at the works of Sir John Brown & Co., in Sheffield, is based on the principle of the lecture experiment in which a piece of steel is cut in half by means of a disk of soft iron. By way of experiment Mr. White, the manager of these works, had the teeth removed from an ordinary rail-saw and the disk mounted on a spindle that could be driven at about 3,000 revolutions a minute, which gave, as the disk was three feet in diameter, a peripheral velocity of 27,000 feet a minute, or 150 yards in a second. Sixty-pound rails were cut through in from three to four minutes, and the success of the machine is so thorough and the economy so considerable that a larger saw is to be erected as soon as possible.

—Many of the colors derived from coal-tar are known to possess poisonous qualities, and all of them are looked upon with suspicion by ultra-careful housewives. Mr. Cheyne communicates to the British Medical Journal a case of poisoning by these dyes in a relative of his own, a little boy about two years and a half old. The symptoms were of a most puzzling kind, till suspicion fell on a ruby-colored merino frock. Two of these frocks were sent to Dr. Dupre for analysis, and he reports that the darker one contained .018 grain of arsenous oxide per square inch; the lighter one, which had probably been washed, contained only a trace. Both had been dyed, it is believed, with corallin. It would seem that the sale of such goods should be prevented by statute, unless accompanied by a reliable certificate of their freedom from arsenic.

—A new artificial light of great intensity, particularly rich in photographic rays, has been recently invented in France. A quart bottle, with a somewhat large mouth, has a cork with two openings. Through one of these a tube passes to near the bottom of the bottle; through the second a larger tube, packed with iron-scale, issues. Fragments of pumice fill the bottle, and on these carbon disulphide is poured. A current of nitric oxide gas, prepared by Deville's method—by the action of nitric and sulphuric acids on metallic iron contained in a self-regulating reservoir—is passed through the bottle, where it takes up the vapor of the disulphide. It is then led through the safety-tube packed with iron-scale to the burners. Excellent photographs were taken in five seconds with this light, the object being six feet distant. In photographic power the light is asserted to be superior to the magnesium or calcium light, and even to surpass the electric light itself. The products of combustion are noxious and must be gotten rid of.

THE PERFORATING POWER OF ROOTS.—It is indeed wonderful how easily the roots of plants and trees bore through hard, impacted soils in search of nourishment. They use for this purpose a sort of awl, of immense power, situated at the end of the root, and capable, with the aid of the other root machinery, of thrusting aside heavy weights, and getting through almost any obstructions. Yet the awl consists only of a mass of microscopic or absorbent cells formed by protoplasm or vegetable mucus—the fluid in which vital action is first set up. The roots of the elm and the maple will bore through the hardest soil of walks or streets, enter drains, twine about water-pipes, and penetrate through the seams of stone and brick structures. The roots of some plants have been known to pass through eighteen inches of solid brick work, and make their appearance in a wine-cellar below. Plants have a vast power in overcoming obstacles when foraging for food. They are like a hungry animal which no fences can restrain when there is food beyond. The movements of roots in soils proceed on certain principles of utility in connection with the welfare of the plant. Some need much more moisture than others, and the roots will drive through rocks to obtain it; others need silicious food, and will penetrate through a clay bank to reach the desired foraging ground. The urgency with which nature drives plants and animals in pursuit of food is almost irresistible.—Journal of Chemistry.

WHATEVER rouses the moral nature, whether it be danger or suffering, or the approach of death, banishes unbelief in a moment.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$4.50  $4.50
By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more than this point than any agency of any other Gin in the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and Gins are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 50 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. GILSAN BROTHERS,

On Saturday, with a further decline in gold and foreign exchange, and a dull market at Liverpool, where the sales were only 6,000 bales, factors evinced more disposition to meet the demand at Friday's reduced quotations, and none but strong staple kinds could have commanded outside rates. Strict good ordinary could have been bought at 13c., and middling sold at 15c. The sales were confined to 107 bales. On Monday we did not hear of a transaction. On Tuesday the business was confined to 105 bales, including 100 taken for the North. The downward tendency of gold and foreign exchange, together with a reduction of 7-32@11-32c. in the quointions for futures at New York and a falling off of 1-16d. at Liverpool, appeared to demoralize the market; and although the sales were of too limited extent to serve as a basis for quotations, yet it otherwise transpired that orders could be executed at a moderate reduction from previous figures, requiring a corresponding modification of our quotations, which, however, must be regarded as nominal. Strict good ordinary sold at 12¾c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 212 bales, against 875 for the corresponding time last week and 1,390 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 993,918 bales, against 1,212,316 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 287,850 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 279,503—3,484,089 against 3,784,592. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 66,368 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 17,329 to France, and of 173,571 to other foreign ports. We quote:

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The annual camp meeting on the Seashore camp ground will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, enjoying the healthful and refreshing sea breeze. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent or temporary tents thereon.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $40, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has sent to the camp ground a large amount of lumber suitable for building tents, to be sold at reasonable prices to persons wishing to build or improve their tents.

A number of tents are built for rent to individuals or families, some twelve feet by fourteen, at $10, others twelve feet by twenty-five, at $15 for the period of the camp meeting.

Provision is made for good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents each for breakfast, dinner and supper, or $1 25 per day. Lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

Arrangements have been made with the railroads for conveyance of passengers, at reduced prices, by the New Orleans and Mobile road, from New Orleans for $2.50, and from Mobile for $2, for the round trip, and proportionate prices from all the way stations. By Morgan's Louisiana and Texas road, the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago road, and the Mobile and Ohio road, at half the usual price of regular fare. The first two of these roads will issue a special camp meeting ticket, with return ticket. The other roads will furnish the ordinary ticket, which, punched by the conductor, will be retained by the passenger; and at the office of the camp ground the tickets will all be stamped by the secretary to make them good to return on. In New Orleans tickets can be had at the ticket office, corner of Camp and Common streets, and at the depot, at the head of Canal street; and in Mobile at the depot, foot of Government street, and at all the way stations on the roads.

Passenger trains will leave New Orleans at 8 o'clock A. M., and 3.15 and 4.40 P. M.; and Mobile at 8.15 A. M. and 5.30 P. M., all stopping at all the way stations, including camp ground station, except the 4.40 P. M. express train from New Orleans, which will stop at the camp ground and all the principal stations.

Freight trains will leave the depot, at the head of Girod street, New Orleans, and at the foot of Government street, Mobile, at 9 o'clock P. M., and take freight to and from the camp meeting at half the usual rates of charge.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, H. O. L. Rayne, J. H. Keller, G. W. W. Goodwyn, P. Hallaran and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

From this date to the commencement of the camp meeting some one or more of the trustees will be on the camp ground almost daily.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
P. HALLARAN, Secretary.

THE District Conference for the Marianna district will be held in Ozark, Dale county, Ala., September 2-5. Opening sermon at night, September 1. The pastors will please send lists of delegates to Rev. A. Dowling, Ozark. The interest of the District High School requires a full attendance.

M. E. BUTT.

THE District Conference for the Montgomery district, Alabama Conference, will meet at Selma on Thursday night, the fifth of August. The opening sermon will be preached on Thursday night, by Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D.

WM. A. MCCARTY, P. E.

CAMP MEETING.—A camp meeting will be held at the Plaquemine Brulee camp ground, near Plaquemine Brulee church, Opelousas district, parish of St. Landry. DON'T CROWD.

Don't crowd—the world is large enough
For you as well as me;
The doors of all are open wide,
The realm of thought is free.
In all earth's places you are right
To choose the best you can—
Provided that you do not try
To crowd some other man.

Don't crowd the good from out your heart
By fostering all that's bad;
But give to every virtue room—
The best that may be had;
To each day's record such a one
That you may well be proud;
Give each his right, give each his room,
And never try to crowd.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, July 20.—There is still considerable uneasiness among the planters in the bottom in regard to the apprehended overflow, but the river shows by the gauge that it will require three and a half feet rise to bring it to high water of this spring, when the rivers below were full.

AUGUSTA, July 21.—Up to July 4 the cotton crop prospect was excellent in this section; but the intensely hot and scorching weather since caused the cotton to droop, and in some instances to die. The planters in certain counties held prayer meetings for rain. Unless we have rain in a short time the cotton and corn crops will be seriously injured.

GALVESTON, July 21.—The first shipment of new wheat in bulk has arrived. It is classed No 2, sold at $1.16 on the cars, and will be transferred to the new elevator for foreign shipment. Other large lots are reported en route for this port.

HARTFORD, July 21.—The House of Representatives to-day voted, 102 to 82, to indefinitely postpone the bill giving women the right to vote in a presidential election.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22.—The English Centennial commission broke ground for their buildings, four in number, to-day.

MEMPHIS, July 22.—An Appeal's special from Corinth, Miss., says the Democratic convention for the first Mississippi district met there to-day and renominated L. Q. C. Lamar by acclamation as candidate for Congress. Fully five thousand persons were present. Mr. Lamar responded in an eloquent speech.

NEWARK, July 23.—A building erected for the purpose of testing fire extinguishers, while being saturated with oil, exploded from prematurely taking fire, terribly burning D. C. Winegardner, the mayor, Hon. J. B. Jones, Charles Hamilton, street commissioner, A. Bridge, contractor, and fifteen or twenty others, some, it is thought, fatally.

KEY WEST, July 24.—The yellow fever has ceased to be epidemic here. The health of the city is good.

MEMPHIS, July 25.—There is still considerable alarm in regard to the apprehended overflow, and prayers were offered up in the various churches to-day for its abatement. This evening's news from above is regarded as favorable, despite the heavy local rains of last night, as it is believed the nine inches' decline reported by the signal service at Cairo renders danger from the Ohio freshet impossible.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Commodore Cooper telegraphs as follows from the Pensacola navy-yard to-day:

"Keep strangers away from here. The fever is raging at Barrancas. Sixty-five cases; seven deaths. Strict quarantine upon Barrancas. No communication therefrom except through our quarantine post. The commanding officer's wife is sick. His (the commanding officer's) duties in providing for the sick are arduous. The fever is of a very malignant type. Ladies and children of the post are nearly all down. Please inform the Secretary of War."

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 26.—Willard Richardson, founder and editor in chief of the Galveston News, died this morning.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 20.—The council of delegates from all the Presbyterian churches in Christendom met in Regent Square to-day and opened the session. Many representatives of American and Canadian churches were present. The object of the council is to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants, arrange mission work, concentrate the influence of the church upon educational and social reform, and organize resistance to infidelity and religious intolerance.

MADRID, July 20.—The constitutional committee has, by a vote of 26 against 7, rejected an amendment to the new constitution in opposition to the principle of religious liberty.

SANTANDER, July 20.—The recent detention of Protestant books by the customs authorities here is believed to be part of a coercive scheme to force active Protestants to leave Spain. This plan, inspired by prominent persons in Madrid, is being executed here by the clergy and the civil governor, who hope by indirect pressure to expel the resident American evangelical ministers. The impression also prevails that the Madrid government hope to conciliate the papal nuncio and the moderates with this underhand persecution, while apparently pursuing a liberal policy regarding public worship. Military precautions are being taken in the large cities against Republican risings.

LONDON, July 21.—The delegates attending the Presbyterian conference number one hundred. The following American representatives attended yesterday evening: Rev. Morris, of Cincinnati; Dr. McCosh, of Princeton; Stuart Robinson, of Louisville; Shaan, of Allegheny City, and Schaff and Rogers, of Maine.

In the Presbyterian council to-day the constitution of the future union was discussed. The American delegates favored the formation of a confederation, but a large majority of the council preferred the title and form of an alliance as less restricted in scope, and it was ultimately agreed that an alliance of all the Presbyterian churches of the world should be formed. The delegates dined together this evening in Free Mason's Hall. Several speeches were made. Rev. Dr. Schoff, of New York, expressed admiration of the recent work of Moody and Sankey, and hoped it would be permanently useful. The final sitting of the council will be held to-morrow, when the results of the conference will be formally announced.

PARIS, July 22.—The Assembly, by a vote of 470 to 155, agreed to adjourn from the fourth of August to the fourth of November.

LONDON, July 23.—The constitution adopted by the Presbyterian council has been made public. The name given the new union is: "Alliance of the Reformed Churches of the World." All churches are included which hold to the Presbyterian system and creed. The preamble of the constitution recites that the objects of the alliance are to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants, to organize mission work, promote educational and social reform, and oppose infidelity and religious intolerance.

The Times to-day has an elaborate article on the American Centennial Exhibition, very gratifying to the friends of that enterprise.

BERLIN, July 23.—The list of German exhibitors at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition has been officially closed. The number of those who intend to exhibit in the art department is eight hundred. The large manufactories on the Rhine and in Westphalia and Saxony will be especially represented. An Imperial commissioner has been appointed to obtain more room for the German department in the exhibition building.

MADRID, July 26.—Carlists in Catalonia continue to give in their submission to the government. Eight hundred additional submissions have been recorded.

The losses of the Carlists the past three weeks, in killed, wounded and missing, were four thousand.

MADRID, July 26.—The constitutional committee adopted the article establishing religious toleration by a vote of 22 to 8.

From the Work.

PRATTVILLE DIST., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On the fourth Sunday in June I completed my second round on the district, and would like to give a short report. Of the portion of the district which was in my charge last year the church has maintained itself pretty well. The pay of the preachers on half of the appointments is in advance of last year. On the others there has been a falling off in pay. Of the appointments that were not under my supervision last year the church seems to be up, and in the support of the ministry has made some advancement.

On my last round we had a very interesting meeting at Randolph, of a week's continuance, resulting in the conversion and addition of several to the church. There have been additions on most of the charges in the district. Our people have seemed to feel the pressure of the hard times, but we hope for relief, as the crop prospect is generally good; yet where I am living, and for several miles round, we have suffered much for the want of rain.

I had a letter, a few days ago, from the Rev. J. M. Mason, pastor of the Lowndesboro charge—one of the appointments in this district—in which he informs me of a serious accident to himself, in having his leg broken above the ankle, by the falling of a horse. He lay an hour where it occurred before he got word to any one from whom he could get assistance. Bro. Mason was doing well when he wrote to me, but he will be confined to his bed for several weeks. May the great Head of the church soon restore him to soundness and health.

I have been able to do but little recently, having been kept at home by the severe illness of our youngest child. J. W. SHORES.

JULY 15, 1875.

WHISTLER, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: It has pleased God to revive his work at this place. We have just closed a meeting of three weeks, and the prospects for good being done are far more encouraging now at the end than at the beginning; so that we have called off, hoping to be able soon to renew the effort. The brethren in the ministry near, and also the presiding elder, gave us timely assistance. Many professed to find God reconciled through faith in Christ. Some were members of the church already. Fifty-five have been added—a large number from the Sunday school, and some are heads of families. The strength of the church is about double what it was, while the increase in members is one-third. The church is encouraged and stimulated.

W. M. WINN.

Letter from Texas.

PARIS, LAMAR CO., TEXAS, June 23, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: I feel that I owe a large debt of gratitude to the publisher for the continued remembrance manifested toward one who has so poorly remunerated him for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. My dear brother, your paper has become one of our household. I feel that I am almost, yes, intimately, acquainted with many of the preachers of the three Conferences so well represented in its columns. We have yet quite an inclination to your city from all northern and eastern Texas, and with the same facilities for reaching New Orleans that we have for Galveston, St. Louis or Memphis you would find a large portion of the produce of this country seeking a market through your agencies. I hope that politically your State is getting into a better condition. You certainly have suffered enough at the hands of your enemies. I feel greatly indebted to the editor for his editorials and book notices; also his news items, and youth's or Sunday school department. If we had money in the country I think perhaps there could be some subscribers obtained here; but, alas! there is none in the hands of the people, or at least it is so said, and it must be true, for I have never seen so little in circulation in any country as I have seen here for the last six months. The crop prospects are flattering. Wheat, perhaps, never was better in this section, and quite a quantity sown last fall. It is now being cut and thrashed, and turning out a good yield. Corn is fine generally, and with one or two more good rains there will be more raised than ever before in one season, as there is so much more planted than usual. Oats pretty good. Cotton is coming out rapidly, and now bids fair to make a good crop. We are wanting rain now in some localities, though not suffering yet. Wishing you success in your enterprise, and an abundant entrance into life eternal, I feel as ever,

Your brother in bonds,

D. M. PROCTOR.

WE GATHER from our exchanges, says the New York Christian Advocate, the record of several veteran editors. Mr. John T. Delane, after constant work in the editorial chair of the London Times for thirty-five years, is still in excellent health, with apparently a long editorial future before him. The Times of this city states that Mr. Delane performs his editorial work daily from nine P. M. to five A. M., and, when it is completed, "finishes off by writing from forty to sixty letters" before leaving the office.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger of July 1 has the following:

"On the first day of July, 1840, the first money article appeared in the Public Ledger as a department of the paper. The same individual that pens this paragraph prepared that first article, and in all the thirty-five years intervening the two dates named this particular department of the Ledger has been in his special charge, and daily contributed by him."

That veteran in journalism, Mr. William C. Bryant, of the New York Evening Post, began his editorial work on that paper July 1, 1821. After fifty-four years of editorial work he is still at his Post, and in social and literary circles moving about among us with the full cheer and much of the vigor of his earlier years.

IF THOU seest anything in thyself which may make thee proud, look a little further, and thou shalt find enough to humble thee. If thou be wise, view the peacock's feathers with his feet, and weigh thy best parts with thy imperfections. He that would rightly prize the man must read his whole story.—Quarles.

THERE is seldom a line of glory written upon the earth's face but a line of suffering runs parallel with it; and they that read the lustrous syllables of the one, and stop not to decipher the spotted and worn inscription of the other, get the lesser half of the lesson earth has to give.

THE second meal makes the glutton, and the second blow or second ill word makes the quarrel.

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: I send you another link to my Oregon correspondence. I do not know, however, that it will afford you any interest except as a friend and brother in Christ. But your readers, many of whom I have the privilege of knowing, may perchance get a few small grains of gold from the rough, coarse metal.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Your paper is an invaluable and loved weekly visitor to our humble hearthstone. Its discontinuance would be a fruitful source of much unhappiness to our little reading circle. We heartily wish many a blessing upon your head and heart too, not only for eternity, but also for this present world.

STRANGE FACTS.

How strange are some facts in every man's life; and one of the strangest in my own is my removal from the once fair and wealthy Louisiana to this far-off yet sunny land. When the thought of transferring seriously possessed the hearts of my wife and myself we made it the subject of earnest and faithful prayer to God; and we resolved that the whole matter (D. V.) should turn upon one single gold hinge, viz.: if it were his gracious will that we should transfer to this field of labor, that he would place the means to do so in our hands. At this time we were about moneyless, and our stewards and other friends about us were in the same train of human experience. We made every effort to dispose of our little homestead, but could realize nothing for it. And yet in due time the needed funds came; and then, feeling that our proposed transfer was sanctioned by the "great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls" in a substantial manner, we hesitated not for a moment in preparing for our long and tedious journey. And now we are here, with blue skies above us, and a rich green and rosy earth at our feet; and yet we appear to be, in our own estimation, as a vessel far out at sea in a dense fog, so that we cannot see our way as to the work to be done here by ourselves. All the churches are represented here, and almost everything else, including woman's rights lecturers and organizations. The people are, as a general thing, harder to be moved upon religiously than almost anywhere else. They require a higher order of preaching, backed up by a blameless life. And then our church is about the weakest and the most unpopular of all the sects or branches of the "Tree of Life." In view of these and other important facts, we have commenced to rub up the old armor, putting a better edge to the sword, sharpening the spikes on the soles of the war-sandals, putting additional layers on the shield of faith, examining the helmet for rents or weak spots, inspecting the girdle of truth, not forgetting the breastplate of righteousness; and we intend to throw ourselves into the great fight afresh, with a spirit of "all prayer," as St. Paul expresses it.

Dr. Hammond, the revivalist, has been at Portland, in our State, for some time past, holding forth more or less every day; but I have not yet learned definitely as to the results. He contemplates visiting some other parts of our State before he leaves. Many speak in his praise, while there is a large number who call him by unpleasant names. However, none of these things—praise nor blame—move him; neither does he appear to count his life dear unto him, so that he may finish his course with joy.

A HAPPY MEETING.

My fourth Quarterly Conference has met and adjourned to convene again just before our next Annual Conference session, in order to close up the business of the year. It ran into a four days' meeting, and then closed as all such meetings should close. Every lover of the divine Savior was tearful or radiant with joy, while two newly-converted souls added their new praises to the grand chorus of "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will toward men." These two were added to the church the same day. This meeting took place in the center (so I am told) of the Universalists' stronghold in this State.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

We are happy at the prospect of greeting Bishop Kavanaugh as the presiding officer of our next Annual Conference. He has made hosts of friends, outside as well as inside the church, along the Pacific slope; and we hope that his visit will do Southern Methodism great good. The preachers are already arranging an extensive work for the old hero of a thousand battles, and if he goes through only half he will have no idle bread to eat. Bishop Peck, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is already here, and expects, says report, to stay some months in this State and Washington Territory.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Our season for camp meetings is passing rapidly. This season is June and a part of July—about six weeks. The harvest comes in about the middle of the latter month, and continues, including shipment to market, till time to haul in all the year's supply of wood, when the long rains set in and such work stops. Our Northern brethren at their last Conference, held at Portland August 12-20, 1871, passed "a resolution looking to the union of all the Methodistic denominations within the bounds of the Conference."—See Minutes, page 12. Upon the still fresh tracks of this official act they hold camp meetings and protracted efforts, and give us the "go-by." In some few cases there is a different feeling, which gives birth to a far different course of action. O why are not brethren consistent? Why not make word and act harmonize on the blessed platform of Jesus?

AN ERROR.

Dr. McFerrin, in his last letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate, makes a small mistake. In speaking of the new church edifices of Southern Methodism in the bounds of this (Columbia) Conference he places one at Junction City, which is only a "union" affair, if I understand it, and fails to speak of a neat and commodious one at Tangent.

OREGON'S UNFOLDING RICHES.

This country grows upon us all the time. Its climate, so far, has not gone to either extreme of heat or cold. Its magnificent woods are mostly fir, cedar, maple, ash, with some pine and cottonwood. So far I have seen neither hickory, beech nor gum. Its tame and wild flowers "are legion, for they are many." Some of the untamed ones grow on the very top of the mountains, and present a strangely beautiful appearance away up there. Of course there are some peaches which reach far beyond or above the line of roses and green leaves, where the pure snows realize an immortality. There are some beautiful birds, but no martins nor mocking birds, so common to Louisiana and other States. Not a great many tame pigeons; but the blue jay is here, and he is not a whit better than he used to be in our boyhood days. I have met the kingfisher also about the streams, where he still plies his old trade of fishing for a living. The meadow or field lark is common on the broad plains, where he sings the song he used to sing without the change of a single note. The "killdee" is here too, with his polite nods of recognition, and hopping, running steps, while he warbles his monotonous "Killdee, killdee, killdee." "The sparrow hath found a house for her nest" here. So has the bobolink, minus his beautiful song, having become too fat and lazy for this sort of exercise.

FRUITS.

Our numerous fruits are beginning to open to us their ruddy fields of delicious wealth. Just think of the hogsheads of cherries, raspberries, currants, gooseberries, everywhere; while blackberries—strawberries are gone—which are your dewberries, plums, apples, pears, etc., are rapidly maturing. These fruits, if not the finest, are among the finest in the world. The plums are put up in various ways for winter use and shipment, and when dried are equal to prunes, and I expect are sold in the States for that fruit. Not much corn is grown here. People can raise it in some parts quite well, but they do not seem to care much about it; hence corn-dodgers and hoe-cakes are rare, existing mostly in the recollections of the oldest citizens. Horses are fed chiefly on hay and oats; hogs are fattened on wheat. Poultry fares as well, but is not so heavily cultivated as in the States; and preachers do not find fried chickens so common a dish here as there. The people raise more eggs, and therefore less fowls.

GOLD.

Our water courses generally are not large, and are made up from the streams which dash down the sides or through the canyons of the mountains. The water is clear and cold, satisfying the thirst of the weary one. Wells are plentiful, not deep, but the water is excellent. Pumps are almost universal. In nearly all the streams gold is found mixed with the sand and pebbles, but not in sufficient quantities to justify labor for it. There are said to be superior gold mines in the State, which are worked extensively, while others are occasionally discovered and opened.

FISH.

The salmon fishing of the Columbia river is in full blast. The fish go up the numerous feeders or branches of this great river to spawn, and return to the sea, if they escape all the fish accidents and traps incident to their fish-life. I am told that either the skin or flesh will destroy a dog if he eats it, and almost every one will do it if he can get it. I never knew what "salmon color" originated from till I saw the brick red flesh of this remarkable fish. Many curious things are told of this fish which must be waved at this time.

Having thus very briefly looked at these earthly beauties and glories, I look up toward the wondrous heavens, which "declare the glory of God," and there I see old familiar friends, which makes me feel that I am not altogether a stranger here. I see Polaris a little higher apparently than he seems to be in your State, and winding around him and Ursa Minor is Draco—the dragon; while Ursa Major—the Great Bear—still flies from Bootes and his dogs. Arcturus, in this last constellation, burns just as brightly perhaps as when Job gazed upon it with wonder and admiration. Scorpio, too, rises and pursues his fiery path, and looks just as grand here as he did in my old home; perhaps he is a little lower in the southern horizon. O, sir, though I am a stranger to all this people, yet I find old familiar friends in the birds and flowers about my path, and among the stars of heaven. But I must come back to earth and Oregon.

A PARADISE FOR PREACHERS.

If our church were in force here, what a support would be given to our preachers; what fat horses would be theirs; what nice parsonages; how well furnished; and how much quarterage would be gathered, missionary money too, and for other good causes; but, as it is, we must live on a short allowance, and lack some important things in the kitchen, in the dining room, in the larder, in the parlor, if there be one—an ornament I have not possessed since the commencement of my ministry—in the armoir, and everywhere else. As it is, we have a noble little band of Southern Methodists here, and they love their preachers where they are true and faithful. I say true and faithful, because "baits" are sometimes thrown out to catch any that may be a weak vessel in defense of true American Methodism.

IMMIGRANTS.

Many persons are coming into the State as immigrants, and when they have the means can do well. But land is high, ranging from $20 to $40 per acre. There is some public land, but it is generally out of the way. Some rent places and live well; but it is better to own a few acres even in the mountains, or far upon the wooded streams, than to rent a large plantation. But I must close. Dear brethren of the Louisiana Conference, pray for us. Yours truly,

JAMES E. BRADLEY.

HARVARD.—The two hundred and thirty-fourth commencement of Harvard College occurred on June 30. The degree of bachelor of arts was conferred on 131 graduates; bachelor of divinity on 4; bachelor of law on 35; bachelor of science on 4; doctor of medicine on 30; doctor of dental medicine on 5; master of mechanical art on 1; master of metallurgy on 1; master of arts on 12; doctor of philosophy on 3; doctor of science on 1.

CONCERNING "hollering" in meeting, Aunt Judy, an old colored woman, said to one of her sisters; "'Taint de true grace, honey; 'taint de sure glory. You hollers too loud. When you gits de love in your heart and de lamb in your bosom you'll feel as ef you was in that stable in Beth'lem, and de blessed Virgin had lent you de sleepin' baby to hold."

A BOY was asked which was the greater of the two, hurting another's feelings or his finger. He said the former. "Right, my dear child," said the gratified questioner; "and why is it worse to hurt the feelings?" "Because you can't tie a rag around them," exclaimed the dear child.

THE ASCENSION.

From the Spanish of Louis Ponce de Leon.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Good Shepherd, will thou leave
In this low vale the flock that was thy care,
Alone to pine and grieve,
While through the purer air
Thou risest up to fields forever fair?

They who, supremely blest,
Until the dawn of this unhappy day
Leaned on thy loving breast,
To whom on earth shall they
Hearken or look when thou art far away?

What comeliness or grace
Can they, whose eyes beheld thy beauty, see
In other form or face?
What music will not be
Harsh to the ears that hearkened once to thee?

Who now upon the deep
Shall look, and curb its fury? Who shall lay
The stormy winds asleep?
What lode star's friendly ray,
When thine is hid, shall guide the vessel's way?

Why change our happy state,
O envious cloud, to helplessness and fear?
How proud of their rich freight
Thy slumbering folds appear!
How blind and wretched those dost leave us here.

Is the Creation of Intelligent, HOLY BEINGS, AND THE DOCTRINE OF FREE AGENCY INCOMPATIBLE?

MR. EDITOR: The discussion going on in your valuable paper upon the subject of holiness may originate, in part at least, from a difference in the understanding of the brethren as to the meaning of the term. Some look upon it as an inward state; others as a relation or result to be worked out by obedience. All, I trust, are aiming at the truth, and nothing but the truth.

That God could create intelligent beings, I judge, none will be bold enough to deny. Our own consciousness tells us we are intelligent creatures, and we know we did not create ourselves; and thus reasoning, a posteriori, we arrive at the conclusion that God made us, and not we ourselves.

Having determined to create intelligent beings, an important question would naturally arise in the divine mind: What sort of a character should they have? Either they must be holy or sinful, or possess no moral character whatsoever. But to say that God did or even could create an unholy angel, or an unholy man, to my mind would be little less than blasphemy. It is equally unreasonable to suppose that he would create such beings with no moral character at all.

Could not God create a being in his own image, in this respect among others, that he be holy, in the true and best sense of the term, as implying positive virtue? No one can prove that God could not create such a being. While maintaining his holy character, such a creature would exhibit a nobler manifestation of the divine glory than mere material or even simply intellectual existence.

In the creation of such a being God would reflect some of his highest perfections; and I can look upon him as rejoicing over the act, and declaring it to be very good; and all the holy angels, created before man, rejoicing with him over the formation of a being resembling themselves as well as the great God. To my mind it is the grandest thought connected with the whole subject of creation: that man was made holy; because, starting with this thought, we rise at last to the sublime conception of the moral perfections of God himself.

This view of man's original character, if I mistake not, is clearly established by the word of God. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." "And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Now, whatever this image and likeness was, it was a creation, an endowment originally bestowed upon man—not a mere emanation, as wisdom flows from God, or light from the sun. Some have placed it in man's body, some in his soul, and some in his having dominion over the other creatures of earth.

Man is evidently a compound being, and hence we do not look for this image in any single element of his nature exclusively. God is a spiritual being, and he has given man a spirit. God is immortal, and he has endowed man with an immortal nature. God is an intelligent being, and he has given to man the faculty of thought. God has freedom of will, and he has bestowed this wonderful property upon man. God is holy, and he made man upright, like himself—holy. In all these respects, the last pre-eminently, the image of God in man consists. Paul, in his letter to the Ephesians, iv, 24, teaches that the change effected in the true Christian by the gospel is a renewal of this image in man, and that it consists in "righteousness and true holiness."

The ability of God to create an intelligent, holy being is furthermore established and confirmed by reference to all those passages of Scripture which attribute the renewal of man's sinful nature to the Holy Spirit. David says: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from me."—Psalms li, 10, 11. If the Holy Spirit is not the Author of holiness in man, David certainly did not know what he was praying about. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."—John iii, 5-7. Here the Savior of mankind attributes the new birth to the operation of the Holy Spirit. Paul tells us, Romans v, 5: "Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us." Here again the love of God, which is the fulfilling of the law, is attributed to the Holy Spirit, Titus iii, 5: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." First Corinthians xii, 13: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." Ephesians ii, 8-10: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

In all these Scriptures—and many others of similar import might be quoted—the regeneration of the soul in righteousness and true holiness is ascribed to God, the Holy Spirit. Indeed who but God can forgive sins, and who but the Holy Spirit can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? If men can make themselves holy by obedience, which seems to be the doctrine of some, away goes the office and work of the Holy Spirit, as well as all those Scriptures which attribute this work to him. O let us not thus grieve the "Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption!" Obedience, as well as all the other acts and exercises of religion, such as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, is the outward fruit of the inward operation of the Holy Spirit.—Galatians v, 22, 23. "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

Now the question arises: Is the view herein set forth incompatible with the doctrine of free agency? I hold that it is not. The angels were created holy, but they were endowed with moral freedom—free to obey God and continue holy, but also free to rebel against the divine government, which some of them did, and thus fell from their first estate. Adam was created holy, but he too was endowed with this wonderful property of freedom, involving power to obey or disobey. He freely chose the latter, and thus brought sin and pain and death into our world, and all our woe. Yes, pain and death. "Wherefore by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned."—Romans v, 12.

Some refer these evils to the violation of the physical laws under which man was placed: others say he would have died any way, whether he sinned or not, and that pain and death are not curses, but rather blessings. As to this I do not know that there was any quality in the forbidden fruit violative of the law of man's physical nature. The woman saw that it was good for food, pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise. It might have been a very wholesome fruit for aught I know. But I do know there was something in that act fearfully violative of God's moral government. It was an act of rebellion, and thus began that terrible struggle between light and darkness which has been raging in the earth for nearly six thousand years. It was the transgression of the just and holy and good law of God, and thus began the reign of sin unto death; to counteract which, and again open the door of hope and life and heaven to ruined man, required the sacrifice of no less a being than the eternal Son of God himself, and started the whole machinery of instrumental means, such as the Bible, the gospel and the church, in order to convince the reason and gain the affections of sinful men, and thus bring them back to the paths of virtue and holiness.

Now the very fact that a sacrifice for sin was required, and that means are adopted to bring about its application, and make it efficient, shows at one and the same time that man cannot save himself, and that God does not, cannot force him to be saved. There is no violence done to man's mental and moral nature in the work of the Holy Spirit carried on in the heart. In every respect, and everywhere—in the kingdom of providence, in the kingdom of grace—God deals with men according to the essential and indestructible principles of their nature. Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

The Church I Love.

MR. EDITOR: Our word "church" is derived from two Greek words—"ek," out of, and "kalco," to call or summon—and signifies the "called out" and "summoned together," and is equivalent to the word "synagogue," which also is derived from two Greek words—"sun," together, and "ago," I lead—and means the "led-together" or called-together assembly—"the church." The use of such terms in ecclesiastical parlance is to signify those "called out of the world," and separated from sin and sinners, and gathered together in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Head of the church, for religious and holy purposes. This language certainly further implies that those who are of the church should find their full fellowship in the church, so that their "hearts" might be "knit together in love." The full, burdened heart-utterances of Jesus in his last great prayer had such results full in view when he said: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." The church cannot "be one" until she believes fully on the Lord Jesus, and separates herself wholly from the world and the fellowship thereof. Besides, the world will never believe that Jesus Christ is the Head of the church so long as the church and the world "are hail-fellows well met."

St. John, the beloved disciple, says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." Love is preference, and there are degrees in this preference. But however difficult for us to outline the slightest degree in the beginning of this preference for the world, yet it may exist, and when such is the fact the love of the Father is withdrawn from that soul. We can usually determine preference by practice; and in this sense that old adage, "Actions speak louder than words," furnishes a good rule. Really and truly a man's "faith" is known by "his works."

If the above be the word of God, and a common-sense, practical view of that word, what are we to think of members of the church who think as much or more of some institutions admitted to be of the world than they do of the church and the fellowship of the same? What are we to think of a member of the church who hardly ever can make it convenient to attend the regular services of his church, and yet who never (or rarely ever) fails to attend the meetings of an institution of the "world?" What are we to think of a member of the church who pays little or nothing for missions and Conference claims, and grumbles when called upon to pay his quarterage, and delays the payment as long as possible, and yet meets and pays his dues promptly and cheerfully in the other institutions? What are we to think of a member of the church who cannot and will not take his church paper because he is too poor and the times are so hard, and yet can and does take a secular or political paper, and pays for it in advance, and reads it with zest and delight?

Can these things be compatible with hearty, earnest, undivided, full-grown, cheerful, delightful fellowship in the church of God? The meek and lowly Jesus says: "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." The psalmist was inspired with the true and sublime sentiment upon this subject when he uttered the following language, glowing and blazing with the fervor of love for and devotion to the church: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

The past and present history of the church shows that she has ever been surrounded and tempted by inducements to divide her fellowship, relax her energy and compromise with the world. The strength and influence of such surroundings are shown us by the fearful and appalling facts on record. In the Old Testament, among many others, one terrible fact may be selected. That fact is found in the amazing history of the great and world-famed Solomon. In the New Testament the sickening and almost heart-crushing fact of Judas may be presented. Since that period, on down the ages of time, facts stand forth in bold relief, constituting an almost continuous line, speaking in their combined and blended voices of solemn warning, falling upon the attentive ear with the stunning tones of hurtling thunder! Oh! may we take the admonition and profit thereby.

I love the church of my deliberate and constant preference so dearly that I prefer her doctrines, discipline, polity, sacraments, hymns, songs, vows, ministry, membership, worship and praises above everything else. And when this mortal life shall cease, and I must be laid to rest in the silent grave, I want her funeral service read, her funeral hymns sung, her prayers offered, and to be buried by her loving hands, and then await the coming period, through the rolling years, when the great Head of the church shall bid me come forth and join "the general assembly and church of the first-born," amid the swelling anthems of eternal glory.

"Let Us Have Peace."

"Of making of books," says Solomon, "there is no end." The same cause that produces the vast multitude of books will produce interminable warfare in political and religious periodicals, if allowed to operate without let or hinderance. We have an exemplification of this fact in the discussion that has been carried on in the columns of the ADVOCATE, for the last six months, on the subject of "Created Holiness." The theological combatants in this paper warfare have not taken the precaution to settle the meaning of the term holy or holiness, and hence there can be no end to this "vain strife of words." It is simply a war of words. One party in this discussion feels sure that Adam was created holy, while the opposing party feels equally certain that he was not created holy. It may be that all these theological gladiators could be brought to terms if they would just pause long enough to find out what they are disputing about. Each party may be right, and, paradoxical though it seem, both may be wrong. One includes in his idea of holiness goodness in exercise, moral purity in the process of development; hence, according to his idea of holiness, Adam could not have been created holy. Another embraces in his idea of holiness only moral purity, freedom from sin; hence, according to his view of holiness, Adam must have been created holy. The conclusion to which each arrives is just, if his definition of holiness be correct. And, again, each is wrong according to the definition of the other. Do not brethren see that there is no possibility of accommodation until these preliminaries are settled? Why prolong the contest? Come, brethren, let us have an armistice at least, if we cannot have a lasting peace. It will give time for sober, calm thought, and for renewing your wasted energies, which must be well-nigh exhausted after such a long-continued and violent contest. The hopelessness of terminating satisfactorily a boisterous war of words will, I hope, incline you to listen favorably to the suggestion. I make it in the interest of peace. In conclusion I say: "Let us have peace."

THE ONE FOUNDATION.—There is a word which is used more, I think, with us in France than with you in England, in reference to religious meetings—it is the word "edify." We ask the question oftentimes: "Have you been edified?" Now "edified" does not mean moved or interested, but built up. And if you want to know whether you have been edified here, I can tell you who has been and who has not. Only those have been truly edified who have been building on Christ. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." And no building is worth anything that is not built upon him. Suppose a man should lay a foundation at one corner of a street, and should go on building his house at another corner—that house would not be edified very quickly. Many people have Christ for their foundation, but they try to build themselves upon something else—on doctrines or systems, or on their own emotions. But, brethren, we are learning here to build ourselves upon Christ. Let us, then, lay everything upon him that goes to make up our building. If we get hold of a new truth let us lay it on Christ. If God gives us joy we must lay it there, or if he gives us sorrow we must lay it there; whatever comes, sunshine or shadow, peace or conflict, lay it there. And there are small stones needed in a building as well as large ones; so you must take all the little things of your lives and lay them on him. It is a blessed way to do, it grows wonderfully better every day, and thus we shall truly "build ourselves on our most holy faith."—Rev. T. Monod.

AMONG the cannon seized by Col. Sir L. Pelly, on the occasion of the recent arrest of the Guicowar of Baroda, India, were two made entirely of gold, and two of silver. The former are said to have cost £30,000 each. They were covered with red silk cloth, and were in charge of a special corps.

Obituaries

MARY CAROLINE RAMSEY was born at Oak Hill, Wilcox county, Ala., in October, 1855. She was the daughter of Rev. A. C. and Mrs. Jane E. Ramsey, of Gadsden, Ala., and granddaughter of Rev. E. Hearn, deceased. While on a visit to her uncle, Robert W. Hearn, of Mobile, in the early part of this year, her clothes accidentally caught on fire, and she was so badly burned that death ensued April 9.

She was richly endowed of God in person, mind and heart. She was the object of more than usual affection from family, relatives and friends. The announcement of her death, particularly under such distressing circumstances, was received by all who knew her with sorrow and tears.

To her natural good qualities and graces there were added those which education and religion impart. After receiving the advantages that the schools in her neighborhood afforded, she was sent to Tuskaloosa Female College, where she graduated last summer. I shall never forget with what a joyful spirit she announced to me, by letter, the end of her school-girl days, rejoicing not so much that they had ended as that she had had an opportunity to prepare herself for life's duties and work. She wished to contribute her part of service in the great field of God. She understood, better than many no older than she, the reality and earnestness of life.

The influences surrounding her all her life were calculated to impress her with the importance of personal piety. Several years ago she gave her heart to God and united herself to the Methodist Church. I have known very few who seemed more attached to the church, and more at home in the house of God. She enjoyed the means of grace and joined in the work of the church. When she had ended her pupilage in the Sabbath school she became one of its most punctual and faithful teachers.

It was in the sacred precincts of home that her character shone most beautifully. Toward father and mother she was obedient, loving, tender. In the affairs of every-day life she exerted herself to minister to their comfort and happiness. She was not only child, but companion to them, walking cheerfully along with them amid life's labors and struggles. Often she enlivened the tediousness of the way with sweetest song and music.

It remains only to add: Her beautiful life ended in a triumphant death. She conversed freely with her mother during the many days and nights of her last sickness. Patiently, calmly, trustingly, she committed all into the hands of God, and awaited the summons. "Though dead, she speaketh."

W. M. MOTLEY.

SISTER TEMPERANCE CASSADY was born in Edgecombe county, N. C., in January, 1807, and died at her residence in Lawrenceville, Henry county, Ala., March 1, 1875.

She was married to Mr. Alexander Cassady in 1826. He preceded her several years to heaven. They had ten children, four of whom, with their parents, have left this vale of tears. The remaining six are all members of our church. Rev. John Cassady, of the Alabama Conference, who died in 1873, was a son of this truly elect lady. In early life Sister Cassady found the "pearl of great price," and unto death she was a true witness for the Master—a worthy example of faithfulness in all the relations she held. In the church she was indeed "a mother in Israel." At home, as a wife and mother, she discharged faithfully and lovingly the high and important responsibilities that devolved upon her, and today six children rise up and call her blessed. The day before the summons came she was in her usual place in the house of God, it being the Sabbath of our first quarterly meeting for the present Conference year; and as she knelt around the altar, where she had knelt so many times before, to commemorate the death and sufferings of her Lord and Master, many of those present noticed how fervently and devoutly she prayed, and when we took the bread and wine from the hand of our presiding elder, and handed the elements to Sister Cassady, we noticed a strange but sweet and almost heavenly smile that was lighting up her whole countenance, and it was with difficulty that she refrained from shouting aloud the praises and power and glory of that name in which she had trusted for these many years, and found it suited to all her wants and sufficient for all her trials. Little did we think that was the last time we should ever hear her voice in prayer, or meet with her in the assembly of God's people; but though we knew it not, yet she was then feeling that life's battle was almost fought, and the victory nearly won, for we were afterward informed that she had told her son and his wife that she was going to church for the last time; and so it proved, for in less than twenty-four hours the rustling of the angels' wings was heard as from their high empyrean they bore down the chariot which was to convey her blessed spirit to the realms above, and a voice was heard saying: "The Master is come, and calleth for thee."

THOS. C. M. GOLLAND,
Pastor.

ASA RANDALL was born October 26, 1801, and after a long and painful illness died of dropsy, June 21, 1875, aged seventy-four years, seven months and twenty-five days. He was born in York district, S. C., and his father moved to Pickens county, Ala., when he was about nineteen years of age, where, at the age of twenty-two years, he was married to Eleanor Hull, with whom he lived a long, happy and profitable life, raising a large family of children, who are all useful members of the Methodist Church. One of his sons, Rev. Jeptha F. Randall, is an itinerant, and a faithful laborer in the North Alabama Conference.

Bro. Randall was a man of strong mind, with firmness and decision of character, which rendered him useful both in the church and as a member of society. He labored until he secured himself a comfortable home, with the comforts and conveniences of life about him. His house was the preachers' stopping-place, and whenever they were in trouble or needed assistance they always knew where to go for help. Methodist books were found in his library, and Christian Advocates on his table, and he was ever ready to talk about the history of the church and the great good it had accomplished.

Having been converted soon after his marriage, he was a member of the church nearly fifty years, and served as class-leader for thirty years. I conversed with an aged brother, since his death, who was a member of his class years ago, who testified to his faithfulness, and the good counsel and advice he had often received from him.

He lived a long, useful and laborious life, filling the offices of steward, class-leader and trustee faithfully; and after "serving his own generation well" he died, leaving a bright testimony behind that he was going home to rest from his labor and toil. I conversed with him often during his sickness and just before he died, asking him whether his way was clear. His answer was ever the same: "Jesus is with me. Jesus, my precious Savior!" And though his mind was wandering during his last hours, he was rational to the last on the subject of religion, and was heard to repeat the lines:

"Jesus, thou art my everlasting trust:
Thy goodness I adore;
Send down thy grace, O blessed Lord,
That I may love thee more."

How blest the righteous when he dies!

MRS. LAURA JANE WHITAKER, whose maiden name was Waldrom, was born in Clarke county, Ala., April 3, 1855, and departed this life at Whistler, Ala., July 6, 1875.

She was bereaved of her parents when young, and thus lost their counsel. She grew up, maintaining herself until her marriage. For some time she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but did not enjoy the comforts of religion until she was made the subject of affliction. She evinced the deepest repentance and the most unfaltering trust in Christ in the extremity of her life. Her death-bed scene was bright. She suffered under a severe disease, but all that death did was to blow out the candle of her life. As her life was fast ebbing away she began to say, "O death, where," and then stopped, when a friend continued: "Where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" She said: "Yes, that is it." Her last words, as she passed away, were: "Glory! glory! glory!" And doubtless she continued the same utterance of praise on the other shore.

GROWING OLD.

Softly, oh, softly, the years have swept by thee,
Touching thee lightly with tenderest care;
Sorrow and death did they often bring nigh thee,
Yet they have left thee but beauty to wear.
Growing old gracefully,
Gracefully fair.

Far from the storms that are lashing the ocean,
Nearer each day to the pleasant home light:
Far from the waves that are big with commotion,
Under full sail and the harbor in sight.
Growing old cheerfully,
Cheerful and bright.

Past all the winds that were adverse and chilling,
Past all the islands that lured thee to rest,
Past all the currents that wooed thee, unwilling,
Far from the port and the land of the blest.
Growing old peacefully,
Peaceful and blest.

Never a feeling of envy or sorrow
When the bright faces of children are seen:
Never a year from their youth wouldst thou borrow;
Thou dost remember what lieth between.
Growing old willingly,
Gladly, I ween.

Rich in experience that angels might covet,
Rich in a faith that has grown with thy years,
Rich in the love that grew from and above it,
Soothing thy sorrows and hushing thy fears.
Growing old wealthily,
Loving and dear.

Hearts at the sound of thy coming are lightened;
Ready and willing thy hand to relieve;
Many a face at thy kind words has brightened:
"It is more blessed to give than receive."
Growing old happily,
Blest, we believe.

Eyes that grow dim to the earth and its glory
See but the brighter the heavenly glow!
Ears that are dull to the world and its story
Drink in the songs that from paradise flow.
All their sweet recompense
Youth cannot know.

Fourscore! But softly the years have swept by thee,
Touching thee lightly with tenderest care;
Sorrow and death they did often bring nigh thee,
Yet they have left thee but beauty to wear.
Growing old gracefully,
Graceful and fair.

How Hans Egede Got to Greenland.

The evangelization of the inhabitants of Greenland is the great work of the Moravian missionaries. The first missionary, however, was not a Moravian, but a Norwegian minister of the Lutheran persuasion. His name was Hans Egede, and his history, so far as it is known, is among the most remarkable in the annals of modern missions.

Hans Egede was a pastor of the parish of Vogen. He had heard that a colony of Christians had once emigrated from Norway to Greenland, and he longed to visit them. Greenland became the subject that absorbed him. He had met old sailors who had been there in whalers, but they could tell of little else than shipwrecks, or long winters passed in ice-bound seas. He wrote to the Bishops of Bergen and Drontheim, entreating them to take some means of communicating with their brethren in Greenland. He applied to those who had the charge of the Danish missions, and after thirteen years' praying and planning he found a patron in the King of Denmark.

The way was opened for the fulfillment of a long-cherished desire. But now other troubles began. The people called him a fanatic and many other hard names. They spoke of the sin of taking his wife and children to such a barren and barbarous region as Greenland. His wife's brothers remonstrated, and his wife herself complained. Hans was in great trouble, but he thought of the words of Jesus about leaving father and mother, and all that are dear to us, if we are to be his disciples. His health began to fail; his nights were sleepless. To go to Greenland was a fixed resolution. At last his wife consented to go with him.

A large sum of money was raised, a ship purchased, and about forty persons agreed to accompany the missionary, and establish a colony. The King promised £60 a year to support him, and the Greenland traders were also favorable to the mission. The ship was called "The Hope." It sailed on the second of May, 1721. During the voyage the passengers were exposed to many dangers from storms and ice-mountains.

They did, however, reach land; but such a land! The country was bleak and barren. It had no fields of corn, no waving trees, no blooming gardens. A few herbs and mosses and billberries were all its produce. Its beauties were ice and snow, and rocks and ravines. There were no friends to welcome the missionary and his family, and no house ready to receive them. A hut made of stones and mud was erected in the course of a month, and Hans Egede began to set about the work for which he had come. He expected to find the Greenlanders Christians, but they were perfect heathens, and subject to the worst vices of heathenism. When Hans Egede and his wife had learned the character of the Greenlanders they were glad they had come, and resolved anew that they would spend their life and strength for the improvement of the people.

It was a great resolution. They were in a land where no corn grew, and consequently there was no bread. There were neither vegetables, fruit nor milk. The Greenlanders lived on fish and seals, and they thought the missionaries had come for the sake of blubber. At first Egede could not say a word to the natives. He found out the phrase for "What is that?" and by means of it he acquired the names of all things that could be perceived by the senses. His son Paul could draw, and he made pictures of Scripture subjects, which his father to the best of his ability explained to the people.

In this way the first winter was passed—the long winter which, in those regions, is one continual night of six months' duration. The ship was still in Greenland, and those who had come with Hans Egede were loud in their complaints that he had brought them to such a region of desolation. Their stores were nearly exhausted, and they could not be reconciled to eat the seals' flesh that fed the Greenlanders. The prospect was so gloomy that Hans Egede and his wife at length agreed that if no ship came with provisions they would all return to Norway. The first to break this resolution was Egede's wife. As the fixed day for sailing drew near she forbade the house to be pulled down or anything to be packed up. At last a ship came laden with provisions, sent by the King of Denmark.

Hans Egede's story is told in Norwegian by his son-in-law, Jans Olaf. He was one of the crew that came in the King's ship. Describing their approach to Greenland, he says: "The night of an arctic summer came on as we passed into the river, and I saw for the first time the land we had come to seek. It was all unlike what I had imagined. A magnificent background of mountains stood clear against the glowing crimson sky; but the strange light of midnight in that region bathed the headlands next us in one uniform—that of pearly gray. Not a sound of life was heard along the winding shores, nor a creature seen on the many islets, till a figure that I recognized as Madame Egede suddenly appeared on the brow of a tall cliff. For a moment she sank upon her knees with clasped and outstretched hands, then rose and vanished like a dream." When he landed he soon met the pastor and went to his house. It was a great joy to them all to find that a ship had come with provisions, and that they would be able to stay in Greenland and continue their work. When the pastor came into his hut he clasped his wife and told her he had received letters from the merchants of Bergen, and that the mission was to be supported. His wife exclaimed: "Thanks be to God! He is a shield to them who trust in him." Turning to Olaf, Hans Egede said: "If you had not arrived before the end of June we were pledged to return to Norway, and this is the twenty-seventh." He wrung his hands as he spoke, and then his face beamed with gladness. Olaf replied: "Would it not be best still to return with this ship, as it seems impossible that you should long remain here. I see that the dwellings, which were so strongly built, are already half demolished. All are expressing their determination not to spend another winter on this island. How can you live here alone?"

Madame Egede exclaimed: "We would rather, if no roof is left us, burrow in the earth like foxes than desert this land in which God has given us his work to do."

Olaf looked from the face of the wife to that of the husband, and saw there the same fixedness of purpose that Madame Egede had expressed.

The pastor smiled and said: "It is this Anna that has kept us all to our duty, but starvation was already at work with us. I could not have remained alone to see her and our children perish. Had not your ship reached us this week I must have gone home in the one that brought us, feeling forever a dishonored man."

To learn the language, and become acquainted with the customs of the Greenlanders, Egede and his two sons lived with the people in their huts. This was no pleasant way of living; but the missionary of the cross must be all things to all men. Sometimes Egede took long journeys with his sons, leaving his wife and the girls alone in their hut. One day he came into a valley where were the ruins of some Christian churches. The Christians were dead and lying at peace in the churchyard.

Olaf describes some of the scenes and events in Egede's interview with the Greenlanders. On one occasion they were watching the women rowing the fishing boats, and listening to the songs which they sang in accompaniment to the strokes of the oars. "They are a musical people," said Egede; "how blessed a work it would be to give them a love of Christian melodies, and prepare them to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb!"

The minds of the people were very gross. It was difficult to raise them to anything higher than a love of fish-hooks and harpoons, and delight in the flesh of seals. The missionary was regarded by them as a kind of wizard, who had magical power. The people sent for him to heal their sick, and were disappointed when they were not healed. There was but little prospect of doing any good among them. But Egede persevered. He had begun, and he would not leave while he had strength to go on. The King of Denmark died, and the next King did not support the mission. For two years Egede and his family suffered great hardships; but the mission was again reinforced.

In 1733 the smallpox made great havoc among the inhabitants of Greenland. Three thousand died. Egede and his wife spent their days and their nights in nursing the sick. They took some even into their own houses, gave them medicine, watched over them, comforted them, and prayed for them. But to human strength there is a limit. Egede's wife died, overpowered by anxiety and fatigue. His own health failed, and now he thought that there was no hope for him but to return to Norway. He had been fifteen years in Greenland, and had seen but little prospect of his work ending in the results he expected. He had baptized many children by consent of their parents, who were not themselves Christians. The Lutherans have always attached great importance to the rite of baptism. He had mastered the language of Greenland, and was gaining an influence over the people. There were many under instruction, and improvements were made in the houses and in cultivating the ground, but Egede still complained with the prophet: "Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" He called the people together before he left them, and preached from Isaiah xlix, 4: "I said, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain; yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God."

Hans Egede returned to Norway, but left his son Paul to preach to the Greenlanders. He lived to the age of seventy-three, and to the last his passion was—missionaries for Greenland!—Luke Hall, in the Day of Rest.

THE MARTYRS OF MADAGASCAR. Dr. Mullens says: "I have had the pleasure of seeing many of those places where they hid themselves away and worshiped in secret, or where, through persecutors, they were caused to suffer, and even to lay down their lives before their fellow-countrymen. About fifteen months ago I was in one part of the country and was asking the missionary who resides there whereabouts it was that the martyrs used to gather. We had often heard of those gatherings, and one of his native evangelists who stood by said: 'Why it is just here. I can show you the spot.' And we all went with him, and he led us to a great group of enormous bowlder rocks. He pointed out a little opening between those rocks. It was about two feet from the ground; and we crept into it, and then looked around, and on the left, beneath a big bowlder, the biggest of all, we found that there was a little space of about fourteen or fifteen feet long, and about three or four feet wide, and about two feet high—just such a space as we might find beneath a rather long dining-table. He said: 'We used to meet here—ten or twelve or fifteen of us—on the Sabbath day, to read the word of God. On some occasions we were as many as forty in this little cave. We could scarcely see. The light came in only just at the end. We have met in the evenings. We had only our Bibles or pages of the Bible, and pages of the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' and little hymns printed. And we were particularly glad in our meetings when it rained, because we knew that the soldiers would not be coming after us, and that they would rather let us alone on those unpleasant evenings. And then, what with the noise of the rain and the fears of the soldiers, we felt assured that we could enjoy singing for once in our worship, and so we sent up our thanksgiving before God.'"

A MISSIONARY of the American Sunday School Union, in western Texas, presents the needs and experiences of his work thus: "Since the grass grew so as to furnish subsistence for my team I have made two trips on the frontier, and organized five Sunday schools, and had warm welcomes from the cow-boys and their sisters—a wild kind of humanity. To escape a thundershower, I sought refuge in a cabin among the mountains, where there were three little boys. I asked the eldest who made him? After thinking over it, he answered: 'God.' I asked the next: 'What did God make you for?' He laughed as he replied: 'I 'spect for to raise calves.' I asked the youngest why God made him? He thought it was 'to pick up chips.' I asked the first, who was the first man? This was beyond his depth; grasping a tuft of his yellow hair, he gave it a pull, but the answer did not come. His father, who sat in the corner, puffing tobacco smoke from a corn-cob pipe, became quite excited, and giving a twitch to his pantaloons, and looking as wise as an owl, he yelled out: 'I say, Jim, tell him Job was the first man.' I slept that night in my wagon, and the next evening organized a Sunday school in the neighborhood, and saw those boys and their father enrolling as members. I am delighted with my work as a Sunday school missionary, and would not exchange it for the wealth of an Astor."

AFFECTIONS well placed and dutifully cherished; friendships happily formed and faithfully maintained; knowledge acquired with worthy intent, and intellectual powers that have been diligently improved as the talents which our Lord and Master have committed to our keeping—these will accompany us into another state of existence as surely as the soul in that state retains its identity and its consciousness.—Southey.

FAITH addresses itself to man's whole being; it sounds every depth; it touches every spring; it calls back the soul from its weary search within itself, full of doubt and contradiction; it presents it with an object, implicit, absolute, greater than itself—"One that knoweth all things." It provides for every affliction, every want and aspiration.—The Patience of Hope.

MAN is so great that his greatness appears even in the consciousness of his misery. A tree does not know itself to be miserable. It is true that it is misery indeed to know one's self to be miserable; but then it is greatness also. In this way all man's miseries go to prove his greatness. They are the miseries of a mighty potentate, of a dethroned monarch.—Pascal.

Religious Intelligence.

—The New England Congregational churches received between eleven and twelve hundred additions at their May communion.

—A Sabbath school is reported in Barcelona, Spain, of one hundred and fifty pupils, classified according to the American system.

—Mr. Hammond has commenced union meetings in Portland, Ore. Gen. O. O. Howard is taking a prominent part in the services.

—In the most Catholic nation of Spain, where there are 9 archbishops, 93 bishops, 100,000 priests, 14,000 monks and 19,000 nuns, out of a population of 15,000,000, less than 1,000,000 can read or write.

—Rev. Benjamin Johnson, who left the Protestant Episcopal Church to enter the Reformed Episcopal Church, has been appointed evangelist for Georgia and South Carolina. His work will be largely among colored people.

—An Eastern paper states that it is reported that nine hitherto unknown fragments of the Codex Sinaiticus have been discovered by Prof. Brugsh-Bey, who accompanied the grand duke, heir of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in his visit to the convent of Mount Sinai.

—The reports of Madagascar missionaries for the last year show that they have been battling hard and with a considerable degree of success against the ignorance and disorder incident upon the wholesale accession to the church during late years. Members are less, but quality is better.

—The missionaries of the American Board have at last been allowed to open their chapel in a building which they had rented in Nlogo, which is a city of sixty thousand inhabitants, and separated from Kobe only by a river. Services were quietly commenced on March 28, and have thus far continued without interference and with growing attendance.

—The agitation among the North of Ireland Presbyterians as to the kind of wine to be used at the celebration of the Lord's Supper is causing discord. One of the ministers has notified his intention of moving his presbytery to ask the Assembly to issue a pastoral letter setting forth authoritatively the views of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland on the question.

—Wesleyan Methodism in London, England, shows healthful signs of growth. The following statistics exhibit its present condition: Total number of members, 21,139; on trial, 1,055; net increase in the year, 578; number of new members received during the year, 2,518. The difference between the numbers received and the net increase is due to deaths and removals.

—The Free Church congregation at Lovedale, South Africa, numbering about 400 members, had 109 candidates for church membership at the close of 1874. This large number is due to the fact that the elders, deacons and many of the members are out daily upon evangelistic work, of which they give some report at their missionary meeting on the first Saturday evening of every month.

—The Pope, in reply to an address presented to him from the students of colleges in America, thanking him for elevating Archbishop McCloskey to the cardinalate, is said to have used these words: "It seems that the harvest in America is ripe, and laborers alone are wanting. You are preparing yourselves for that work. Preach especially by example in order to convert that great nation."

—The revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament met May 11, in Jerusalem Chamber, London, for their fiftieth session, and sat for seven hours. There were present the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (who presided,) the Bishop of St. Andrew's, Prof. Moulton, etc.—in all twenty members. The company carried on their revision of the Epistle to the Romans to the middle of the tenth chapter.

—A careful table has been prepared for the Missionary Advocate, showing what was contributed per member by each Annual Conference to the cause of Methodist Episcopal missions last year. The average for the whole church was 42⅔ cents per member. In the Alabama Conference the contribution was the smallest, being ⅓ of a cent; in the Philadelphia Conference it was the largest, being $1.25 per member.

—A new lay college, founded by Dr. Cullis, and called "Faith Training College," was dedicated in Boston May 12. Its general aim and course of study are similar to those of Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle Lay College. Dr. Cullis is president, and is assisted by the Rev. W. E. Broadman, Dr. Daniel Steele, the Rev. H. M. Parsons, the Rev. Marcus Ames, the Rev. E. P. Thwing and Prof. F. A. Sawtelle, while Mrs. Cullis superintends the female department.

—No religion so fosters the pride of the human heart as does Buddhism, with its system of meritorious works. Missionaries have consequently found that their labor was hardest and their progress slowest among the Buddhists. The Presbyterians have long been at work among the Buddhists of Siam, with very little result. It is therefore encouraging to hear of a work of grace at Petchaburi, which has already added six to the church, while two were received into the church at Bangkok during the same months.

—The Rev. Antonio Arrighi, says the Methodist, writes to us from Florence, Italy: "The Lord is greatly blessing my work in this city. We have now opened a nice hall, right in the center of the city and almost facing the famous Chapel de Medici. Our audiences are indeed very good, and last Sunday I took into full membership fourteen of my young converts. They responded cheerfully to all the questions. Two more will be taken into full membership next Sunday, so that we may have it to say that in Florence we have a real Methodist church of sixteen members. New ones are coming in almost every night."

THE CASTLE BUILDER.

A gentle boy, with soft and silken locks,
A dreamy boy, with brown and tender eyes,
A castle-builder, with his wooden blocks,
And towers that touch imaginary skies.

A fearless rider on his father's knee,
An eager listener unto stories told
At the Round Table of the nursery,
Of heroes and adventures manifold.

There will be other towers for thee to build,
There will be other steeds for thee to ride,
There will be other legends, and all filled
With greater marvels, and more glorified.

Build on, and make thy castles high and fair,
Rising and reaching upward to the skies;
Listen to voices in the upper air,
Nor lose thy simple faith in mysteries.

THE ORPHAN.

An orphan, Lord, to thee I come;
Be thou my Father, and heaven my home.
No parent's hand to help is near,
But thou an orphan's cry wilt hear.
Though weak and helpless, may I see
Father and Guardian both in thee.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 12.

WHAT A BLIND MAN SAW, AND HOW HE SAW IT.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: You will remember that I told you that Huber was blind, totally blind, and yet he devoted his life to watching the habits of bees; and that, notwithstanding his blindness, he learned and recorded more in regard to them than all who had lived before him knew about these useful little insects. How do you suppose he did it?

"Why, grandpa," says Harry, "he must have got some one to look for him."

That is true, Harry, my boy; but why didn't this some one who did the seeing do all the rest of it, and get the reputation that now attaches to the name of Huber? I see you don't know, so I must tell you. It is the intellect and soul of man that constitute the real man, not the body. It is hard to fetter a soul. Men had been watching bees for thousands of years, but it required an intellect like that of Huber to classify and arrange the observations made, to direct inquiry to the right points, and deduce from the observed facts the real truth.

Huber was fortunate in having a servant who was ready and willing to assist him in his work. He was a peasant of the canton of Vaud; and his name was Francis Barnens. He was also assisted by his loving wife, and later in life by his son Pierre, who afterward achieved a distinction almost equal to that of his father by his observations of the ants, which, as Tom told you, are close relatives of the bees.

Looking through the glass in their hives, then, naturalists soon observed that there are three kinds of bees in every hive: First, the queen bee; second, the drones; and third, the workers. You can notice, too, the drones and the workers whenever you choose to look at a hive of bees, but you will see more drones about the month of March than at any other time of the year in this climate. The drones are those large, clumsy bees that make such a noise; but you can catch them in your hand and they won't sting for the best reason in the world—they have no stings. Nor do they gather any honey, though they eat a plenty of it; and you would think that, since they are the male bees, and are so much larger than the others, they ought to help gather the honey, but they don't; and about June, if you will go to the hives and watch you will see that the little workers are tired of having these lazy fellows about eating up all their honey, and you can see them killing them and rolling their bodies out of the hive, just as Huber and his friends saw them. It is right funny to see a little bee march up to one twice her size and sting him to death in spite of all he can do, though it may seem rather cruel at first; and then to see how two or three of them will get behind him, and roll and tumble him till they at last get him quite outside of the hive! I have often seen them at it.

There is only one queen in every hive. This bee is larger than a worker, and not so large as a drone. You might watch a long time and never see one, as they leave the hive only once in their lives, except when they lead off a new swarm. This bee, which some ignorant people call the king, is the mother of all the bees in the hive. She therefore has three kinds of children—queen bees, drones and workers. She is larger than the workers, and not quite so stout, though about as large as the drones. You might think her a most unnatural mother, for she does not take any care of the young bees, but keeps on laying eggs all the year long, putting them in the cells and sticking them fast to the bottom with a kind of glue. She never puts eggs in cells that have honey in them, though she sometimes makes a mistake and puts more than one egg in a single cell, and then the workers go and take out all of the eggs but one and destroy them. She keeps very busy, as you may well suppose, for she lays in her busy season as many as two hundred eggs a day. In a good strong colony there are about twenty thousand bees, about one-twentieth of whom are drones; these are rarely allowed to live more than three months before the little workers kill them; but even this short life is longer than that of the workers, as you saw the last season when I took the queen out of a common hive and put in an Italian queen. Don't you remember that in a very short time there were none but yellow bees in the hive? This shows very clearly, not only how short is the life of a worker bee, but the fact stated awhile ago that the one queen bee is the mother of all the bees in the hive.

But I see that we won't have time to finish about bees to-night. Tom, what are bees for?

"To make honey, I suppose, grandpa."

Wrong, Tom, quite wrong. No bee ever made a drop of honey since the world was created.

Harry, do bees ever get lazy, do you suppose? Worker bees, I mean.

"I don't know, grandpa, but I thought they were always at work."

You are wrong too. They will never work a bit unless compelled to, as I will show you some time; but now it is bed-time, and we must say: Good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

BUCHALTON, June 18, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been waiting and waiting for Grandpa Goodale to explain "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest" until my patience is almost out. I read all of Grandpa Goodale's pieces when he writes them himself, but when he gets Tom to write for him I don't like it one bit. He uses such big words that I get so tired of trying to pronounce them that I almost forget that I am reading about Barney and the bays' nest. I don't like that way of getting some one else to write for you noway. Mr. Editor, don't you think Grandpa Goodale ought to write his own letters next time, and tell us all about it? I do believe he would if you would go to see him and tell him to. I wish you would please say to Tom that we don't want any more about bees and hornets and wasps and bumble-bees. We only want to know "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." My pa says he thinks that it is a bee-hive, and that Grandpa Goodale is an Irishman, and can't say bees, but calls it bays. But then we don't call a bee-hive a bee's nest. I do wish Grandpa Goodale would make haste and tell us. But I must close.

I am your little friend,

AMMIE FEATHERSTON.

SATARTIA, Miss., July 1, 1875.

GRANDPA GOODALE—Dear Grandpa: I thought that I would write to you to-day, while I am at school. I am very much interested in the Child's Corner of the ADVOCATE, but I love to read "Grandpa Goodale" stories best of all. I do not believe that he is going to tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," but I will be patient, and take things as they come; for I think that grown people know better than I do.

I cannot understand Master Tom's long words, but he explained them all to us, as one of the little writers said.

I am ten years old, and am going to school and trying to learn all I can. I am very well pleased with my teacher.

My father is dead, and I often feel sad when I think of him who has gone to heaven before me; but my mother has married again, and I have a kind stepfather, and a little half sister whom I love very much. I have several stepbrothers and sisters.

Hoping you will soon tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," I will close by signing myself

Your little reader,

MAGGIE F.

SATARTIA, Miss., July 1, 1875.

GRANDPA GOODALE—Dear Grandpa: I will endeavor to write you a few lines to let you know how I like to read your stories. Grandpa, please tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." But I know that you are going to tell us before your stories are out, and I must be patient and keep Grandpa Goodale in a good humor, for I know that he does not love naughty children, and I love to have the good will of all.

I love to sit beside the fireside and hear Grandpa Goodale tell stories about the things that happened long ago, and make up funny stories to please the children and make them laugh.

Well, grandpa, I must close my short letter. Come and see us often, and tell us some more funny stories. Good-by, grandpa.

Your little granddaughter,

SUSIE L.

WE OFTEN speak of being settled in life. We might as well think of casting anchor in the midst of the Atlantic ocean, or talk of the permanent situation of a stone that is rolling down hill.

Assurance.

That the believer should be assured of the forgiveness of sins and of his acceptance in Christ is reasonable. He needs it for his own comfort, and there can be no joy or peace without it. In the nature of things this assurance must come from God. The conflict has been between the sinner and his God. His condemnation has been direct and personal; the reconciliation and the witness of it must also be direct and personal. It is a transaction between the soul and God, and the offended One can alone certify the removal of his displeasure and the restoration of the guilty to favor. The Holy Spirit directly witnesses to the soul. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." In this passage there is a two-fold testimony—the direct witness of the Holy Spirit and the witness of our own spirit. The latter is the testimony of a good conscience, and the consciousness that the inward and outward life are conformed to the will of God. The fruits of the Spirit—holy tempers and an upright conversation—are evidences of a renewed nature, and serve to confirm the direct witness of the Spirit.

Many of the old expositors, and many of the evangelical writers and preachers of the present day, substantially explain away the direct witness of the Spirit, leaving only the indirect or co-ordinate testimony of our own spirit. The Wesleyan doctrine of the direct witness of the Holy Spirit is stated by Wesley in these words: "By the testimony of the Spirit I mean an inward impression on the soul, whereby the Spirit of God immediately and directly witnesses to my spirit that I am a child of God; that Jesus Christ hath loved me and given himself for me; that all my sins are blotted out, and I, even I, am reconciled to God." Twenty years after Wesley put this statement on record he prepares another sermon on the Witness of the Spirit, adopts the same words, and says: "After twenty years' further consideration I see no cause to retract any part of this." It is perhaps as careful, guarded and accurate as is possible, and in conformity with the Scriptures and Christian experience. Watson describes this witness as "a comfortable persuasion or conviction of our justification and adoption, arising out of the Spirit's inward and direct testimony." With us assurance is to the fact of pardon and adoption as a present experience, from which there flows the hope of future and eternal glory. It determines nothing in reference to our final perseverance. It is a present acceptance and sonship which, if not forfeited by unfaithfulness, leads to the heavenly crown.

This witness of the Spirit is to be insisted on in our dealing with penitents and seekers, and as a point of safe and satisfactory Christian experience. None should rest in anything short of this most comforting inward testimony. Lest the souls of some should become discouraged, it is well to explain that there are degrees of assurance, and that there are states of body and mind exceptional in their character, which temporarily interrupt and obscure the evidence, but still it is a blessing connected with pardon, and necessary to any comfortable sense of the divine favor. No doubt many evangelical Christians, truly converted, apprehend the doctrine of assurance differently from the Wesleyan statement, and do not in terms admit of the two-fold testimony at the same time that they have the direct witness of the Holy Spirit. Thousands are born of the Spirit and cry, Abba, Father, with no clear conceptions as to the distinctions between the witness of the Holy Spirit and that of our spirit.

It is, nevertheless, best to explain the doctrine of the Scripture clearly and discriminatingly, lest the people fall into fatal error. Multitudes rest in absolution pronounced by a human priesthood, in the supposed efficacy of baptism to wash away sin, in the laying on of hands for confirmation, or in some other ecclesiastical routine or mystical virtue which they believe to inhere in rites and ordinances. There may be those who are sincerely aiming at a religious life, who are building upon a mere inference connected with repentance and the exercise of faith, but who have never felt the love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost. It is common for people to connect themselves with the church who desire to be Christians, and who are perhaps too ready to imagine that this step is sufficient in itself. Our children are coming up in the church, they have always been under its discipline, but the religion of their childhood; as they come to years, does not open out into this inward witness of the Spirit. There is abundant occasion therefore to set this doctrine of assurance in the forefront of religious experience, and to insist upon the direct witness. We cannot go around the express declarations of Scripture which affirm that "he that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself;" "and because ye are sons God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying: Abba, Father."

Can there be justifying faith without adoption, and can there be adoption without the Spirit of adoption, crying: Abba, Father? We have met with instances where it seemed to be so, but we believe that in these cases there was at least a low degree of assurance—a twilight not consciously apprehended, and only waiting a stronger faith to open into perfect day. We would encourage the weakest and cheer the least of God's children, but we would not go too far. It is the office of the Spirit to witness, and none other can tell the penitent that his God is reconciled, that his sins are forgiven. No third party can here intervene save the appointed Mediator himself, and there is but one Comforter.

The Father's Good Pleasure.

There are Christians of a fearful disposition who never fully realize that God is most anxious to bless and save them. They seem apprehensive not only of the enmity and wiles of the devil, but of God himself, as if he were on the watch to find occasion against them, and if possible to bring them into condemnation. They do not realize that they have to do with a Father whose love is infinite and tender, but rather with a severe Master, whose delight is more to find fault and punish than to approve and reward. Their carefulness is inspired by fear rather than by love. It does not occur to them that God is their best friend, and that he seeks to help them in their weakness, to bear their burdens, and to shelter them from their enemies.

As an earthly parent does not like to discover faults in his children, and as he rejoices in the manifestation of every noble trait, so is it with the heavenly Father in his relation to his children. God does not aim to thwart the efforts of the soul, or to prevent the successful endeavor to gain the crown of life. Neither is he indifferent to the trials and temptations which beset the path of the good. As he desires the repentance of the sinner, and Heaven rejoices over one sinner that repenteth, so does he seek to confirm and establish the believer, and to bring him safely to the end of his race. God is for us, not against us. He has not made the terms hard and the way difficult because he would cheat us of the promised prize. He does not set the goal so high because he would have us fail in reaching it, nor does he lift the standard of attainment more and more as we advance to tantalize and disappoint. What he requires is needful to our happiness and salvation. The straitness of the way is felt because it is opposed to our sins, and the path is rugged because self-crucifixion is required.

Christ never uttered words more tender and assuring than when he said to his dismayed and feeble followers: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Whatever of hinderances were in their path, whatever severities of self-denial and suffering, and whatever obstacles, they were not to interpret these as indicating the Father's disposition to deprive them of the final reward. It was not a gauntlet they were to run, in which God in his providence would trip and overthrow them, or suffer them to be stricken down by their foes. It is his good pleasure to give us the kingdom. It is his delight to put the crown upon the brow of his suffering child, and to bestow everlasting life upon those who have chosen the better part. He gives not grudgingly, nor with reserve, but out of the fullness of his compassion and love. Whatever may be the strength of our desire to gain the heavenly rest, God is still more concerned for our salvation.

This consideration should dissipate the fears of the timid Christian, and inspire a filial confidence in him who knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. In battling with the world and with temptation, in breasting the storms of adversity and in passing under the cloud of sorrow, let us not misread the lesson or dishonor God by distrusting his goodness. The end is clear to his sight, and he gives the kingdom in toil, care and conflict, because he sees that we would receive it in no other way. Head-winds and opposing currents awaken vigilance, and safety comes from the elements which seem to threaten our destruction. Seemingly baffled and blown far out into the deep, the end is to keep us from the breakers of a dangerous coast, and at length to bring us into the quiet haven of a perfect trust, and a peace passing understanding. The heavenly kingdom is a boon surpassing all our thought, towering above all merit and all unaided human endeavor, but it is the Father's good pleasure to give it.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The meeting at the Seashore camp ground, near Biloxi, began on Wednesday morning, the twenty-first instant. Rev. Dr. Walker, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, has charge of the religious services. All the other affairs of the occasion are in the care of the board of trustees. There are several new tents this year, and the grounds have been considerably improved since we were here a year ago. Up to the time of this writing (Monday evening, July 26) there have been probably thirty-five conversions, and much interest is manifested. The meeting last night was one of remarkable power. The altar and vicinity were crowded with penitents, and twenty found peace in believing.

The order of services this year is the same as heretofore. Four sermons each day; an experience meeting after the eight o'clock morning sermon, and prayer meeting and altar exercises after the sermon at the other hours. The attendance is probably better than last year. Yesterday (Sunday) there must have been over one thousand under the preaching shed at the eleven and three o'clock services, and nearly as many at the night service. There were scarcely less than fifteen hundred people on the ground during the entire day—some estimate the number as much greater. The daily attendance on week-days has averaged, we judge, about seven or eight hundred.

There has been no disorder among the people, but the best of behavior and the utmost seriousness. About sixty preachers have been present, and nearly forty are still on the ground. The preaching has been excellent throughout, sometimes a little too long, and God has owned and blessed his word. There are a good many people here from Selma and Montgomery, and other parts of middle Alabama, and a strong representation from Mobile.

After the three o'clock sermon today the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a vast company of ministers and people, the services being conducted by Bishop Keener. The meeting will close on Thursday night, the twenty-ninth instant. Further particulars will be given next week.

A Few Words on Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: If you will permit me I will address a few words to our brethren, the ministers of Christ, through the ADVOCATE, on the subject of holiness. I am but a weak and feeble woman, but God sometimes chooses the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. Why is it that we hear so little from the pulpit on this subject? Is not holiness required of the people of God? And, if so, surely we as a church are living far beneath our privilege and duty. There is a great responsibility resting upon those who proclaim the gospel to declare the whole counsel of God. The people are looking to them for the "bread of life."

There are a few in our vicinity who stand as witnesses that "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin." Others are seeking to know this for themselves. Last Friday we had a meeting here for the promotion of holiness, and it was there revealed that some had been inquiring the way of full salvation; and the fact that none of the preachers could give them any experimental knowledge of it had proved a stumbling-block in their way. This is a serious matter. How many throughout the land would enter into this blessed state if their leaders were holy men, filled with the Holy Ghost and with power, and devoted to the work of spreading scriptural holiness! There is no doctrine more plainly taught in the Bible, and yet so little understood in the church generally. "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy, break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you."

COLUMBIA, LA., July 7, 1875.

The Superannuate.

The Galveston Christian Advocate has a well-written article under the above heading. We give the following extract:

They give him a "superannuated relation." It was a heavy trial. Sometimes he thinks it must have been a grave mistake, but he submits to the law of the church. He manages, with the help of friends and by gathering the remnant of the property his faithful wife brought him on his marriage day, to secure a little home. He tries to make some corn, plants a little patch of cotton, raises some potatoes, and tries hard to make his own pork. He begins life, in a secular point of view, when others end it. He hears the shout of battle, but others lead in the fight. Now and then he preaches, but he feels that he is building on some other man's foundation. He would preach more, but he has to get bread for his family, and the church he served so faithfully in the days of his strength has made but little provision for her servants when they are broken down. No wonder his heart feels sore sometimes; and the pain is deeper that the church he loves inflicts the wound. Forgotten by the church he has helped to build; a listener in churches where his voice was welcome in other days; a cipher in a Conference which once regarded him as its leader. He is human and he feels it. Like Mordecai, he sits at the gate, but the king he served with such fidelity seems to have forgotten him.

It is well there is a home beyond the river, and a book in which the deeds of the faithful man are kept in everlasting remembrance. That fact cheers his heart. He talks it over with his faithful wife and teaches it to his grandchildren. In those days when he poured out his strength like water he was not working for a comfortable home in his old age, but for a crown in his Master's kingdom, and he expects to wear it. That Master will not forget him. He often gets shouting happy over the thought, and if members of a modern stamp or preachers of refined taste do not like it, no matter. They shout sometimes in heaven, unless John was mistaken in what he saw on the Isle of Patmos.

God bless these gray-headed veterans. They have done their work and have almost finished their course. The church owes them a debt. The pittance paid them in the Conference collections is a feeble expression of what is their due. We have but little respect for the preacher who neglects it, or for the people who give it grudgingly. It ought to be the largest in the church, and it would be if the younger preachers would do their duty in presenting it. "Republics are ungrateful," and churches also, but we have never known a people with any genuine religion in their hearts refuse the appeal for the superannuated preachers, and orphans of preachers who died in the work, when properly presented.

The Camp Meeting at Round Lake.

A second fraternal camp meeting was advertised to commence July 1, about a week earlier than that of last year, and to continue until July 14. A goodly company were present at the opening of the meeting, and their number was daily augmented, so that after the Fourth the marshaled hosts of God's elect were counted by the thousand; and still they come.

THE SERVICES.

Three preaching services are held daily, concluding with a prayer meeting. Besides these a prayer meeting is held at six o'clock A. M., another at eight A. M., and another at four P. M. At half-past one P. M. Mrs. Bottome holds a children's meeting, in which the little ones seem deeply interested. At one of these meetings which we attended Mrs. Ex-Gov. Wright and Rev. Dr. Nelson, of our Book-Rooms, made short and touching addresses, which riveted alike the attention of children and adults, and at another Mrs. Amanda Smith, well known in camp meeting circles, spoke to the profit of all. Mrs. Lankford, sister to the late Mrs. Dr. Palmer, holds daily experience and prayer meetings in a commodious frame tabernacle belonging to a West Troy church. Other elect ladies are here working for the Master. Among the prominent ministers present are Bishops Janes, Foster, Harris, Andrews, Kavanaugh, Campbell, Miles, Hosley and Jones; Drs. E. O. Haven, J. P. Newman, F. Bottome, J. Miley, T. H. Pearne, William H. Pearne, L. H. King, J. E. King, Prof. Wheeler (editor Methodist,) J. O. Clark (Savannah,) Dr. R. Nelson, Dr. C. D. Foss, Dr. J. B. McFerrin, and Revs. S. V. Leech and B. I. Ives. Others of note are expected.

The services have increased in interest, and the congregations since the Fourth have been very large and attentive. It was estimated that yesterday (Thursday, July 8) there were upward of five thousand people on the ground; and the number will probably be much larger as the meeting progresses.

This attendance, though good, is not as large as at the former meeting, nor are the results thus far as encouraging. The tide of religious feeling has, however, continued to rise, until now a very gracious influence rests upon the encampment, and a goodly number are either seeking pardon or full salvation.

At the close of a precious discourse by Dr. Miley, on Wednesday afternoon, it was announced by Bishop Janes that Bishop Kavanaugh, who had just arrived, and was sitting on the stand unobserved by most of those present, would conduct the prayer meeting. The Bishop briefly expressed his gratitude to God at being permitted once more to behold so many familiar faces, and affectionately exhorted all to gather around the mercy seat and seek pardon and full salvation. A gracious season of prayer followed.—New York Christian Advocate.

Opportunities.

How many there are in the church of Christ who sigh for opportunities of usefulness, while they never take hold of those close at hand. They want something to do—some great thing, like Naaman of old, and the simple waters of Jordan are despised by them; but if we remember that life is made up of little things, and the daily consecration of these little things may bring about great results, like the small seeds which, scattered, bring great harvest, we would not look further than our every-day walk and path for means of usefulness. It is said a room may be swept to the glory of God. I am sure it is so. Good living is good preaching, and the heart tuned to the praise of redeeming grace will give forth no discordant music. If these words, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," be our life motto, we shall not need to sigh for opportunities of usefulness. A pious couple in England, after morning prayers with their children and servants, meet for a few minutes in their own room to ask the Lord for work. "Lord, what will thou have us do to-day? Let us work for thee, O Lord!" and, expecting in faith the answer, their senses are quickened to perceive and seize the opportunities, and they are wonderfully and remarkably blessed. "Ye have not, because ye ask not."

A lady once, writing a letter to a young naval officer who was almost a stranger, thought: "Shall I close this as anybody would, or shall I say a word for my Master?" and, lifting up her heart for a moment, she wrote, telling him that his constant change of scene and place was an apt illustration of the words, "Here we have no continuing city," and asked if he could say: "I seek one to come." In trembling she folded it, and sent it off. Back came the answer: "Thank you so much for those kind words. My parents are dead, I am an orphan, and no one has spoken to me like that since my mother died long years ago." The bow, shot at a venture, hit home, and the young man shortly after rejoiced in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of peace. Christians, how often do we close a letter as anybody would, when we might say a word for Jesus.—Mrs. A. Campbell, Quebec, in Daily Witness.

Tribute of Respect.

The committee to whom was referred the subject of the death of Dr. Hamilton and Judge Byrd beg leave to report:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God to remove from our midst, by death, two of our number—Dr. Jefferson Hamilton and Hon. W. M. Byrd, the former of whom was one of the original founders, and ever after a warm and efficient supporter of the university, the latter for a number of years a prominent and active member of the board of trustees, and at his death the president of the same; therefore,

Resolved, by this board of trustees, That while we feel the need of their counsels in our meetings, and deeply deplore their loss to the university, and to the cause of education generally, nevertheless we meekly acquiesce in the wisdom and goodness of that Providence which has called them to their higher and better home above.

Resolved, That this report be entered upon the minutes of the board, and that a copy of the same be sent by the secretary to the bereaved families of the deceased.

A. H. MITCHELL, Chairman.

On motion of Dr. Peterson it was ordered that copies of the foregoing resolutions be sent to the New Orleans and Nashville Advocates for publication.

Sec. Board of Trustees, Southern University.

WATCHING THE JESUITS.—During a debate in the English Parliament, June 10, a notable incident occurred. In response to a question by one of the members, Mr. Disraeli, on behalf of the government, said:

"There is no doubt that there are in this country members of the Order of Jesus, commonly called Jesuits, and there is no doubt that their presence in this country is a misdemeanor under the act of George the Fourth—the Roman Catholic emancipation act. During the period that has elapsed since the passing of that act, now nearly half a century, the government of this country has, I believe, in no instance—certainly in none known to myself—proceeded against any Jesuit under that act as committing a misdemeanor, and, so far as her majesty's government are influenced by the circumstances with which they are acquainted, the same policy will prevail. At the same time I beg it to be understood that the provisions in that act are not looked upon by her majesty's government as obsolete, but, on the contrary, as reserved powers of the law, of which they will be prepared to avail themselves if necessary."

BY A CIRCULAR of the Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, La., we learn that this old and popular school for boys opens its twenty-first annual session in October next. Prof. W. H. N. Magruder is one of the oldest and most experienced educators in the South, and needs no commendation from us. There are living epistles all over the country attesting the professor's skill to form the character and to discipline the mind. We quote a paragraph from the circular:

A due regard is also paid to the health of the pupils. Hearty exercise, wholesome food and regular hours have combined, with the remarkable healthfulness of situation, to confer upon the school an almost unprecedented immunity from sickness and death. The principal is deeply sensible of his responsibility in this particular, and guards with constant solicitude against the consequences of reckless exercise and imprudent exposure.

The school is a family. No effort is spared to foster the home-feeling, and supply, as far as possible, the kindly influence of the domestic circle. This, and its result—the high sense of honor that prevails in the institute—render the harsher measures of school discipline but seldom necessary.

Respect for religion and attention to its duties are expected of all, and every member of the school is required to attend the place of worship selected by his parent or guardian.

LATEST FROM THE LONDON REVIVAL MEETINGS.—London, July 9.—The hall in which Mr. Moody is holding his meetings in Camberwell was crowded last night one hour before the beginning of the services. The building was also surrounded by a crowd, which broke through the outside gates, and it was this that created the panic inside the hall, which was only stilled by music. The congregation remained standing while the incoming crowd was quieted by a statement from Mr. Moody that the meeting would not be held unless they retired.

A ministers' meeting, to consult with Mr. Moody as to the future, will be held on Monday next, when Mr. Moody's work here will close. He has met the London committee, who have decided to continue the noon prayer meetings under the management of the best men they can find.

"PETER'S PENCE."—The Evening Post recently had the following:

"A case which is interesting to New Haven people is that of an Odd Fellow in that city, who owned a lot in the Roman Catholic cemetery in which two of his children were buried. Last week he died; but the priest denied him burial in his own lot, on the ground that he forfeited his right of burial in consecrated ground by joining a secret society. His widow complained of this, when the priest offered to make it all right if she would sign over to him all the money she should receive in aid from the society; but this she refused to do, and thus the case now stands."

A BAREFOOT SCHOOL.—Mr. Ray, a delegate to the Baltimore convention, related the following incident: "A school was organized in southern Indiana not long ago, and fifty children attended the very first Sunday. The next week not a scholar came! What could it mean? It was soon discovered. Were those boys and girls coming to a Sunday school when the teachers wore shoes, and they had to go barefoot? Not they! The third Sunday found the teachers barefoot too! And they went unshod to that school all summer. Something of that spirit is what we want everywhere in our labors of love for dying souls."

THE telegraph from Waco, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of July 17, brings us the sad intelligence that Miss Mamie Connor, the beloved daughter of Rev. W. G. Connor, D. D., presiding elder of Waco district, Northwest Texas Conference, has passed from the home she made bright by her presence to the land beyond the river. The beautiful and the loved are often taken. We extend the sorrowing parents our warmest sympathies. We know how tenderly she was loved, and how sad their hearts must be. May God's grace support them.

OUR WEEK OF PRAYER.—The Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, at their late meeting in Nashville, appointed a week of prayer, beginning August 8, for a special blessing on our missionary labors and for our institutions of learning.

ANTICIPATED sorrows are harder to bear than real ones, because Christ does not support us under them. In every slough we may see the footsteps of Christ's flock who have gone before us.

FRENCH WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.—This body held its annual session at Dieulefit, June 16. Rev. J. P. Cook was elected president. Seventeen ordained ministers were present at the opening. The report of the principal, Rev. Matt. Gaillenue, concerning the Institution Evangelique, was very hopeful. The Pensionnat Evangelique is also in a promising condition. During the sessions an Evangelical Alliance meeting was held; also a Conference love-feast.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed! Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La.	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1871—From Canton, Miss.	2 00
June 11, 1875—From Selma, Ala.	5 00
Nov. 24, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Dec. 3, 1871—From Jas. Williams, Toney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 16, 1875—From C. C. Manning,	6 10
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La.	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss.	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. WAGON MANUFACTORY.

STUDEBAKER BROS., SOUTH BEND, INDIANA.

July29 0t

"THE LARGEST WAGON AND CARRIAGE FACTORY IN THE WORLD.—We present on this page an illustration of the factory buildings of the Studebaker Bros. Manufacturing Co., of South Bend, Ind.; of which our energetic and popular citizen, Mr. H. M. Hollingsworth, has become the agent for the Southwest.

"This corporation has made its name and fame not only throughout this country, but also in foreign countries, by the very superior and substantial quality of its work. The brothers Studebaker started business in the year 1852; the number of wagons built then was five in a year, and by perseverance, industry and integrity they have in twenty-three years built up an establishment with a capacity of fifteen thousand wagons a year, which number they are now building to supply the steadily increasing demand

"The Carriage Department.—Aside from their very extensive wagon works, this company manufactures a large variety of the very choicest stock of buggies, phætons and carriages the workmanship and materials of which are the best. Mr. Hollingsworth, in adding a full line of their stock to his already large supply of his own manufacture did so to make his stock more complete in variety of pattern and design, as well as prices."

We take the above from the Home Journal, and would in addition call attention to Mr. Hollingsworth's advertisement.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE, of Macon, Ga., is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the United States. It is under the patronage of the North and South Georgia Conferences, and as an institution of learning stands deservedly high. Rev. W. C. Bass, D. D., is president, and Rev. C. W. Smith, D. D., secretary. The opening of the thirty-ninth annual session is changed to September 15, 1875. For catalogues address the president or secretary.

VERONA FEMALE COLLEGE, VERONA, MISS.—The annual session begins on Wednesday, September 15, 1875. For catalogues and further information address the president, Rev. T. C. Wier, A. M.

Farm, Garden and Household.

How to Eat an Orange.—A writer says: "Always on a Southern gentleman's table the dessert of oranges is furnished with small silver fruit-knives and spoons. The orange is held in the napkin—just as you hold an egg—and with the slender point of a knife a circular incision is made in the stem end of the orange, and the stem core is nicely taken out, leaving an orifice large enough to admit the egg-spoon. The orange is held and eaten then just like gourmands eat an egg in its own shell; and the skill and grace with which this is done—that is, without soiling the fingers or napkin—are, as in the same process with the egg, a test of good breeding. I have known the most inexpert person to master the few difficulties in the way after two or three efforts, and their satisfaction was an infinitely pleasant sight. To hostesses who like to have their table preserve in some degree at the close of an entertainment the beauty which dazzled the guests upon entering this method is most desirable. Servants—let me put in a plea for these silent ones, whose interests are too seldom regarded—are spared the tedious duty of gathering up the fragments; and guests, who look with dismay at this tempting apple of the Hesperides, can thus enjoy it as they never did before. Only the delicious nectar of the fruit is eaten, with the more delicate pulp; the tough fiber—of which, indeed, there is very little in an orange plucked from the tree under its own skies—being left in the shell."

Effect of Paris Green on Vegetables.—Whether Paris green used in the destruction of potato bugs and other insects is poisonous to vegetable life is a question of much interest to all. Dr. William McMurtie, of the Agricultural Department at Washington, has devoted considerable time and experiment to the elucidation of this question. Among other experiments he planted peas in boxes of soil impregnated with a solution of arsenic of different strengths, the object being to ascertain if arsenic could be absorbed in sufficient quantity by plants to become injurious to the health of the consumer, and, if not taken up by the plant during growth, whether it exerted a poisonous influence upon the plants themselves. The plants were found to be affected in proportion to the amount of the arsenical compound used, the size of the growing plant decreasing regularly as the amount of the poison was increasing. A chemical test of these plants, after being so affected by this poison, revealed no trace of arsenic, and the conclusion arrived at was that arsenic cannot be absorbed and assimilated by plants in the process of growth, though plants may be injured by the presence in the soil of about nine hundred pounds of Paris green, or about one hundred and fifty pounds of arsenic of potash per acre. With the quantity of Paris green actually used—perhaps five or ten pounds to the acre—no effect upon plants or their consumers is possible.

An Old Receipt Worth Ten Dollars to any Farmer.—Take one part (by weight) resin, one part beeswax, and four parts good fresh or sound lard. Mix and melt together over a slow fire, so as to be sure not to burn the mixture. It makes an ointment that is superior to anything I have ever seen tried for the flesh of either horses or cattle, for either fresh or old sores, and is especially good to remove old, dry scabs. It softens the scab, and it comes off, leaving the skin soft and tough.

I was using a horse a cold, muddy winter day, and the next morning I found him with legs swollen and rough, and so still that it seemed to be very difficult for him to move. I brushed off the dirt and applied the ointment as soon as I could after I found it out. I made the application morning and evening for two days, and the third day one application, and the horse was cured. I was compelled to use the horse a little the first day, and after two hours' light work he worked as well and free as ever, and I kept on using him every day.

The mixture is the best thing I ever used for boots or shoes for outdoor wear, as it makes spongy leather water-proof, and hard leather soft.—D. S., in Southern Cultivator.

Points of the Dairy Cow.—Mr. E. H. Seward, of Marengo, N. Y., in giving the characteristics which he most prized in dairy cows, says: "We want a cow low in legs, deep in the chest, and through the lungs a chance for a large flow of blood; this gives health. We want also a great width across loin; this shows great secreting power; the udder should set well up under the body, wide teats and wide quarters. The escutcheon, or milk mirror, should be wide—the wider the better. The hair should be bright, showing a healthy condition." He wanted also a deep shoulder; neck to come out large from the body, tapering finely to the head, the head firm and bony. The head should taper well down to a small muzzle; the skin should always show a yellow color, with a firm, soft feeling. A lively spirit is essential; good cows are not dull, and are apt to be fractious and nervous if ill-used. Dairymen should look carefully to the comfort of the cow. A cow showing a yellow skin, with a yellow inside to the ear, indicates giving rich milk. He would like the hair on the milk mirror soft and firm. He thought a large cow on the same food would give the most milk.

Value of Sugar Beets for Fattening Swine.—An experiment was recently made in New Hampshire upon a Suffolk pig, wherein sugar beets were largely employed in fattening. The animal was about a year old, and the feeding upon boiled sugar beets, tops and roots began on the sixteenth of August, and was continued three times a day until the first of October, after which ground feed was given, consisting of two parts of corn and one of oats, three times a day, till the animal was slaughtered, the meal being mixed with cold water. The result was, on the sixteenth of August, when the sugar-beet feeding was begun, that the weight was three hundred and sixty pounds; September 1, three hundred and ninety pounds; October 1, four hundred and fifty pounds; November 1, five hundred and twenty pounds. This is the substance of the statement given, by which we perceive that the increase the last of August, when fed on boiled sugar beets, was at the rate of two pounds per day. The same rate of increase on the same food continued through September. When fed on ground corn and oats, made into cold slop, the gain for the next fifty days was less than a pound and a half per day.

How to Raise Plums.—There is a secret about plum-raising. We have discovered it in travelling over the country. We never visited a large plum orchard in our life that we did not find plenty of fruit, and we never visited any place with eight or ten trees and found a good crop of this fruit. Now these facts set us to thinking, and the result of our thoughts is this: that it is very easy to have all the plums you want to eat and sell. The secret connected with plum-raising is to plant plenty of trees, so as to give fruit to the curculio and to yourself also. If you plant fifty or a hundred trees you will have fruit enough for everybody. Every such orchard that we ever visited had plenty of ripe fruit. Some even complained that the curculio did not thin out the fruit enough—that the trees were overloaded. So we say to our readers: If you plant plums at all, plant fifty or a hundred trees; then you will be sure to have all the fruit you want, and it is one of the most profitable crops raised.—Annual of Phrenology and Physiognomy for 1875.

A Great Yield of Eggs.—I have a flock of twenty-four hens, a cross mostly of White Leghorns and the Light Brahma. They have laid fairly during the past winter, but in three days of the last week of February they laid respectfully fifteen, twenty and twenty-one eggs. Can any one tell me of so large a yield of eggs from this cross thus far? The produce is hardy, of good size, and fuller in the breast than the pure Brahmas, and almost as broad on the back and in the rump. The legs are nearly free from feathers, which is a great improvement to my eye, and they are not such inveterate setters as I find the Brahmas. In fact some do not want to sit at all, and others that do can be broken up in three or four days, instead of as many weeks, as it has often taken me with pure Brahmas, and I have tried every method for this purpose I ever heard of. This cross-breed of hens has proved superior to my Houdans in laying the past winter.—A. B. Allen, in Country Gentleman.

Transplanting Plants.—The editor of the Germantown Telegraph says: "There is no mode that we ever tried so effectual in transplanting tomato, cabbage, cantaloupe or any other tender plant from the hot-bed, or from one place to another, as to prepare a vessel filled with manure-water and rich soil, about the consistency of thin mush, with which the roots of the plant should be well coated, and set in a hole made with a round piece of wood or dibble. After being rather firmly planted moisten again with manure-water. We have never failed in any transplanting when done in this way, and the trouble is very slight."

Nun's Pie.—Soak one pound of salt codfish in cold water for two hours; put it on the fire to boil, adding a small red pepper and the skin of an orange. Boil eight good-sized potatoes, and, when ready to mash, pick up the codfish, squeeze over it the juice of one orange, and mash all together; add a large lump of butter, put the mixture in a bake-tin, and cover with bread-crumbs; scatter a few small lumps of butter over it, and cover the whole with milk. Bake one hour. If well made it will be as light as a meringue pie, and altogether enjoyable.

Eggs a la Creme.—Hard-boil twelve eggs; slice them thin in rings. Have ready a plateful of grated bread-crumbs. In the bottom of a large baking-dish place a layer of the crumbs, then one of the eggs; cover with bits of butter, and sprinkle with pepper and salt. Continue thus to blend these ingredients until the dish is full; be sure, though, that the crumbs cover the eggs upon top. Over the whole pour a large teacupful of sweet cream, and brown nicely in a moderately heated oven.

The Canada Farmer says: "A few simple rules in the arrangement of flower beds will materially enhance the effect produced: 1. Avoid placing rose colored next to scarlet, orange or violet. 2. Do not place orange next to yellow, nor blue next to violet. 3. White relieves any color, but do not place it next to yellow. 4. Orange goes well with blue, and yellow with violet. 5. Rose-color and purple always go well together.

English Guava Jelly.—Two parts apples to one of quinces; stew the apples and the quinces separately, as the latter, being tough, require longer cooking. The apples should be of an acid nature; those known as Sour Johns are the best. Put them together with an equal quantity of loaf sugar; boil till all the fruit will mash against the side of the stew-pan, then strain and put them into pots, with brandy papers over them.

Good Johnny Cake.—Beat one egg with one-third of a cup of sugar, add one tablespoonful of melted butter and one pint of sweet milk, two and a half cups of meal, half cup of flour, a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and half a teaspoonful of soda.

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—Prof. Buckley, State geologist of Texas, announces that the deposits of iron and coal in that State are much greater than has been supposed heretofore, and that both are of a first-rate quality.

—Of the thirty-five hundred new books published in England last year there were two-thirds as many works on science and art as works of fiction. When it is considered how much more restricted in number the readers of science are than those of novels it is a good sign that works of the former class should make so good a show.

—A characteristic effect of snake-poison is rapid decomposition of muscular tissue. From Dr. Weir Mitchel's experiments it appears that after a few hours the wounded muscle becomes almost diffluent, and assumes a dark color and somewhat jelly-like appearance; under the microscope it has the appearance of a mass of minute granules.

—The use of the spectroscope in the testing of metals is extending, and is regarded as of especial value where purity is essential, for which reason it is employed in the coining establishments of Europe, and has recently been introduced into the United States mint. The way in which the instrument detects even the most minute quantity of impurity is marvelous.

—They have a good deal of wind in Holland, and the people make a good deal of money out of it. There are twelve thousand windmills in operation, each doing a six or ten horse-power service through the twenty-four hours. These mills are kept up at an annual cost of $4,000,000, and they perform all the service required of steam engines at one-twentieth the cost.

—A correspondent of the Builder gives the result of some observations on the effect of color upon the health of women working in different rooms. He says that those who worked in a room colored with yellow ocher were "inclined to melancholy, and complained of a pain in the forehead and eyes, and were often ill and unable to work," while those who occupied whitewashed rooms (at the same kind of work) were healthy and happy.

—An Italian correspondent of the Philadelphia Photographer describes a novel application of photography. He had some fruit-trees that needed pruning, and there was no one in the neighborhood who could attend to the work in season. He therefore photographed the trees, and sent the pictures to an experienced pruner in Turin, who returned them after marking where the branches were to be cut. The artist then pruned the trees himself, following the photographs.

—M. du Moncel has recently communicated to the French Academy his researches on the electric conductivity of badly-conducting substances, especially tissues. He finds that silk, the least conductive of tissues, owes its insulating property simply to its hygrometric insensibility, and that this insensibility is inversely proportional to the charge in the operation of dyeing to which it is subjected. Thus black silk, which bears the greatest charge in dyeing, is the least insulating of silks. Cotton and linen seem to owe their conductive property merely to their hygrometric sensibility.

—The Swiss journals call attention to a very curious phenomenon which has occurred in the course of the upper Danube. The river has suddenly disappeared between Morhinger and Immindingen, on the frontier of the Duchy of Baden and Wurtemberg. On a former occasion, more than half a century ago, it was observed that near the same place a portion of the water escaped into the calcareous rocks, only reappearing near the town of Aach, in the Hobgan, between Enger and Stockbach. At present the whole mass of water is lost near Immindingen. The locality is quite deprived of its waterfalls, and it seems difficult to stop up the holes where the water flows away into the rocky and crevassed ground which forms the separation between the Swiss Jura and the Jura of Swabia.

—The latest proposition in connection with the proposed channel tunnel is that lately presented for the consideration of the French Academy of Sciences by M. Lecomte, who proposed to utilize the ebb and flow of tides for compressing the air which will be required in the proposed tunnel, and especially to take the place of steam in driving the Brunten drilling machines. Whatever may come of the tunnel project, it is to be hoped that the idea embodied in M. Lecomte's suggestion will receive merited attention. In spite of the numerous failures to apply the stupendous forces of both tides and waves, there is yet every reason for believing that the feat will be accomplished, and that our seacoast towns will one day look upon these forces as their greatest industrial allies.—Appleton's Journal.

The Brain Left-Sided.—The superior size of the left side of the brain, as well as the fact that it receives a larger share of the blood than the right, shows that it is predominant in our system. This fact is also shown by the prevalence of right-handedness among all races of men. There is no left-handed race among all the races that people the world. But also the left-handed individuals of every race have the brain correspondingly unequal, only that in their case the right side of the brain is more developed, and the right side, instead of the left, controls the faculty of expressing ideas, whether by language or by gesture, and acts chiefly in intellectual operations. The connection between the greater development of the brain, and the control of reason and its expression by the side of the brain so developed, seems conclusively established. The side of the brain which chiefly guides our actions has the greater mass of gray matter, the greater number of convolutions, the most plentiful supply of blood.—Cornhill Magazine.

FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$1.50 $1.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 90 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $1.50 per Saw. DUBSAN BROTHERS,

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current

The river is 8 feet 11 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending July 27:

Mississippi river and bayous	37
Red river	38
Railroads	72
Lake	1
Mobile	1
Texas	13
Total	202

On Saturday, for the second time this season, the day passed without a sale being reported, and nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices, the Liverpool dispatches at the same time reporting an advance of 1-16d., with arrivals 1-16@⅛d. higher, while at New York spots were firm at previous rates. On Monday the demand was renewed, and 562 bales changed hands at full prices for good staple kinds, and without any apparent variation in other descriptions, an advance in foreign exchange counteracting a decline in futures at New York, and other dispatches not being of a tenor to have any sensible influence. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a further decline at New York, both in spots and futures, but the sales nevertheless embraced 142 bales at irregular and easier prices, without showing any marked decline. High style strict low nibbling sold at 13¾c., and good middling, high style at 15c.

The above makes no aggregate for the past three days of 761 bales, against 212 for the corresponding time last week and 875 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 994,302 bales, against 1,213,-393 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 208,784 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 303,834—3,481,728 against 3,785,572. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 64,896 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 15,772 to France, and of 172,259 to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Commodore Cooper telegraphs the Navy Department that he fears there is some local cause for the fever at Barrancas.

Surgeon General Beali received the following from Key West:

"One death from the fever yesterday from a relapse during convalescence. Only one new case reported during the last twelve days. Thermometer 89°."

Reports received by Surgeon General Barnes, United States army, from Brevet Maj. Gen. Brannan, commanding at Fort Barrancas, Fla., and George M. Steinberg, post surgeon there, show that the yellow fever is raging at that place. On the twenty-first instant there were six cases, and on the twenty-fifth fifteen. The commanding officer on that day asked authority to hire as many nurses as might be necessary for the fever patients, and expressed the opinion that every one there would have the fever who had not had it before.

The sergeon general, in reply, telegraphed him: "Hire as many nurses as you may need. Any assistance this office can give you is at your disposal." The sick were well cared for and there was no panic. One assistant surgeon from New Orleans arrived on that day, and two more had been ordered to the post by the department commander. The wife of Lieut. Ingalls and his child were attacked that day, but there were no deaths. Fifty-three cases were reported up to six P. M. on the twenty-sixth instant, and four deaths, among the latter Col. Randol's child. No officers had then been attacked. Mrs. Brannan, the wife of the commanding officer, was sick on that day. The patients were having all they needed. Three additional physicians and a hospital steward arrived from New Orleans on the evening of the twenty-fifth. No cases had been reported from Fort Pickens since the morning of the twenty-fifth.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 28.—The amount of the Indemnity from Spain, growing out of the capture of the Virginius, has been received by the government and is ready for distribution. Claimants to any share therein should address the Department of State.

Com. Cooper reports no cases of yellow fever at the navy-yard or villages in the vicinity. Five deaths have occurred at Barrancas. Dr. Steinberg is down with the fever. No new cases reported from Fort Pickens during the past thirty-six hours.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Captain Belknap, at the navy-yard, Pensacola, telegraphs that Mrs. Lieut. Ingalls died last night. There were nineteen deaths at Barrancas out of sixty-four cases. All well in the navy-yard. Lieut. Deshler died at Barrancas yesterday.

NEW YORK, July 30.—A Havana letter, dated July 24, says that a Nuevitas letter of June 25 says that about ten days ago a large Spanish convoy left Puerto Principe for Guatemaro, consisting of forty-five ox carts and ninety-three pack mules, loaded with arms and ammunition, provisions and $150,000 gold for the army at Cascoro and Guatemaro, under the command of Col. Hueiches, was suddenly attacked by rebels, eight hundred strong, under command of Gens. Garcia and Recoos, and the whole forces of guards and escort thrown into confusion, and the convoy captured by the rebels. The loss of the Spanish troops was about one hundred and fifty killed, among the number Col. Hueiches, who was in command. The rebels' loss could not be ascertained.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The postal money order system between the United States and Canada goes into effect on Monday next.

The following was received to-day from Gen. Brannan, commanding at Fort Barrancas: "No new case of yellow fever and no death since my report of last night. Dr. Steinberg's symptoms are very favorable this morning."

NORFOLK, July 30.—Gen. George E. Pickett died to-night at 10 45, after a brief illness, aged fifty years.

NASHVILLE, July 31.—A special to the Nashville papers, from Greeneville, Tenn., dated seven o'clock to night, says Ex-President Andrew Johnson died of paralysis and heart disease. He had been complaining somewhat of ill health during the past month, but felt no serious apprehension. Last Wednesday he took the morning train to visit his daughter, with whom Mrs. Johnson had been sojourning the past six weeks. He rode in a hack from Carter's depot to her residence, some miles distant, and seemed in good spirits.

On his arrival he ate a hearty dinner. After a few minutes of general conversation he retired up stairs and conversed with his granddaughter, Miss Lillie Stover. While thus engaged his tongue refused utterance, and to her great consternation he fell from his seat to the floor. Help was instantly summoned, and almost as soon as raised he stated, indistinctly, however, that his right side was paralyzed.

After being taken to bed, when the family spoke of sending for a physician, he forbade it, saying that he would soon recover. On this account the summoning of medical aid was deferred twenty-four hours, when Dr. Jobe was called from Elizabethtown, two miles distant.

He instantly began horoic treatment, aided by Dr. Cameron, and seemed at one time the next day to be succeeding. The patient conversed imperfectly in regard to domestic matters, and did not seem conscious of approaching dissolution, but his case was beyond the skill of physicians, and at seven o'clock last night he became unconscious.

Mrs. Patterson and Andrew Johnson, Jr., arrived an hour later with two physicians from Greenville, but he did not recognize any of them, and after seven hours and a half of unconsciousness he peacefully breathed his last, surrounded by his wife, children and grandchildren except the son and daughter of ex-Senator Patterson. The body will be brought here to-morrow morning, and be buried with Masonic honors on Tuesday.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 1.—The Signal Service reports this evening show that an overflow is inevitable. The river here rose a half inch, and another heavy rise is reported at St. Louis, and a steady advance at Cairo, with general rains in the country above.

This leaves little hope that planters in the Mississippi bottom will escape the dreaded inundation, and their crops, which were never better, will be lost.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 2.—The situation along the river is very gloomy, and planters are very despondent in view of the floods reported in all the upper rivers. The rise here to-day was only an inch, but the head of the second rise at Cairo probably will reach here to-morrow, though the river probably may not rise rapidly before the latter part of the present week.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 2.—The board of inquiry in the matter of the presentment of Bishop Whittingham, having concluded its duties, adjourned sine die. The following is the finding of the board:

"Whereas, The board of inquiry convened by the action of the Right Rev. Bishop B. B. Smith, D. D., the presiding bishop of the House of Bishops, to consider certain charges in the case of the Right Rev. William R. Whittingham, D. D., of Maryland, having duly and fully considered the said charges, do hereby "Resolve, That from the evidence before them they are of the opinion there are not sufficient grounds to put the Right Rev. William R Whittingham upon his trial in said matter."

LOUISVILLE, August 2.—Returns from the State as yet are meager, but so far the Democratic majority is about the same as at the last election for Governor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The census shows the population of this city to be 1,050,000.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 28.—Fifty mills have closed in Ashton; eight hundred operatives are ousted. Thirty-one mills closed at Dundee, and twelve thousand persons are out of employment. Both employers and operatives have held meetings and resolved not to yield. If Oldham strikes should extend to all mills in that district thirty thousand persons will be out of employment.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are making a tour in North Wales. On Monday next they will assist at the laying of the corner-stone of a Presbyterian church near Wrexham.

MADRID, July 28.—It is decided that the colonies shall be governed by special laws, and have representation in the Cortes. The colonial elections will be regulated by a system, which will be enacted at the proper time.

MADRID, July 29.—An official dispatch announces that the main body of the Carlists is concentrated in Catalonia.

Gen. Martinez Campos has taken the town of Seo de Urgel, in the province of Lerida, among the Pyrenees, by assault. The citadel still holds out, but must yield to the heavy artillery of the Alfonsist troops.

From the Work.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Brookhaven District Conference was held in Clinton, Miss., July 8-10. In the absence of our beloved Bishop Paine, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder, occupied the chair.

The work was thoroughly inquired into and found to be in good condition. The spiritual condition of the church is good. Pastors are doing all that is possible for the promotion of God's kingdom. Old circuits and stations are fully up to their duty.

We were pleased to learn how much the laymen aid their pastors to guard the flock, both by counsel and example, not leaving it all for one to do, but seeing a duty and taking hold of it.

As to the grand cause of missions, Brookhaven district will lead the Conference. Larger amounts have been collected and subscribed than ever before.

The Sunday school question was thoroughly inquired into. The answers generally were very encouraging. All seem to be awake to the great duty of teaching the young the word of God, and training them in the way they should go. Nearly all the Sunday schools are organized into missionary societies, and are doing a good work.

As to the support of the ministry I cannot flatter Brookhaven district. Much more can be done in that way. Our people must support the ministry if they want the whole work to be done. Look at the past troubles and do better in the future. Only give the small amount you are commanded to give and see what wonderful results will follow.

One thing much needed on all districts was put on foot—a district parsonage. Each Quarterly Conference will elect one committeeman; the whole committee to have power to purchase or build, at some suitable place, a house for the presiding elder.

The educational interests of the district are fully aroused, having within its bounds one of the best female colleges in the South—Whitworth College, Brookhaven, presided over by Rev. H. F. Johnson. In the interest of this college the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that Whitworth College ought to be endowed.

Resolved, That we, as members of this Conference, will co-operate with Rev. H. F. Johnson in his efforts to secure an endowment for said college.

Resolved, That the president of this District Conference be requested to urge the next Annual Conference to appoint an agent to raise an endowment for Whitworth College.

At the close of the Conference the following resolutions were offered:

Resolved, That we offer to almighty God our devout thanks for his great mercies toward us in pouring out upon our fields refreshing showers and giving to us the promise of an abundant harvest.

Resolved, That in view of his great mercies toward us we will redouble our efforts in building up all the interests of the church of God in our borders.

The following delegates to the Annual Conference were elected: Willis Barnes, R. C. T. S. Hilliard, Josiah Hester and B. H. Catching. Alternates—D. C. Wright and C. Price.

B. H. CATCHING, Sec.

N. B.—The district has cash and subscriptions for foreign and domestic missions to the amount of $1,000.

SECRETARY.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I am glad that I can report the Vicksburg district in a good condition. Last year we had a hard time—but little money, and many of the preachers were poorly paid. But, thank God, this year things have changed. We have the crops all over the district. Corn, cotton and all kinds of vegetables are in abundance. Money is much easier than last year. The spiritual condition is good. Some good revivals, and a fine feeling in most parts of the district. The preachers are all at their posts, and are doing as well as they can.

The Port Gibson Collegiate Academy has just closed its session. No longer any doubt of this school being a success. Bro. J. A. B. Jones is in the right place. He is well suited to the presidency. Let me say that J. A. B. Jones is a success at anything he undertakes. He is assisted by his sisters, Misses Eugenia and Matilda. Sister Jones presides over the boarding department just as though she had been at the business all her life. I would say to all who can do so: Send your daughters to Port Gibson.

Mr. Editor, I give you a cordial invitation to the Vicksburg District Conference, to begin August 26, at Vicksburg. Do come, if you can, for you know you are one of us any way.

F. M. FEATHERSTUN.

VICKSBURG, July 21, 1875.

SUMMIT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This body convened in the Methodist church at Amite City, La., July 15, 1875. Rev. A. B. Nicholson, presiding elder, in the chair, and with a good attendance of preachers and laymen. Charles S. Stewart was elected secretary. Prominence was given to religious service, and great interest was added to these services by the presence and pulpit labors of President Andrews, of Centenary, President Johnson, of Whitworth, and Rev. James A. Godfroy, of the Woodville district. On Sunday afternoon (the eighteenth) Bro. Godfrey delivered an admirable address to the Sunday school.

The Conference proceeded to business (without committees) in the order as laid down in the Discipline. The spiritual state, and the attendance upon the ordinances and social meetings of the church, is generally good. Greater attention is being paid to Sunday schools, many of the schools using the Uniform Lessons and Little People, and some of them having Bible classes of adults connected with them. The financial system is various—assessments with some, subscriptions and the envelope system with others. Contributions to church purposes are not quite up to the mark, but with a promise of doing much better in the future. There are forty-four houses of worship in the district, valued at $42,050, with sittings for twelve thousand persons; but one parsonage, with four others in course of erection.

The following resolution was adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That the pastors of the several charges in this district pledge themselves to renewed diligence on the subject of Sunday schools, and will urge the adoption of our Uniform Lessons, and the use of our Sunday school literature in general.

Also a resolution urging the observance of the good old custom of "fasting or abstinence."

Rev. J. E. Jagers, Dr. George Nicholson, Judge E. P. Ellis and Robert Babington were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Thomas Stockwell and C. S. Stewart alternates.

The Conference left behind it a fine impression for good on the community. It was a happy time throughout. The only occurrence to mar our pleasure was the absence of our beloved Bishop Paine, whom we had hoped to have with us.

The next Conference will be held at Magnolia, Miss.

CHAS. S. STEWART, Secretary.

UNION CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The third Quarterly Conference for this circuit was held July 10 and 11, in the neighborhood of Hopewell church, at a large and commodious arbor which was built for the occasion. The meeting commenced on Thursday, the eighth instant. Rev. E. P. Birch, of Union Springs, preached the opening sermon.

Bro. S. P. Richardson, our presiding elder, was with us, preaching with great power. Bro. Peyton B. Saffold was also with us, and preached with great acceptability to the people. The congregations were very large and attentive. The great Head of the church was with us in revival power. The church was greatly revived. A large number took the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and nine persons united with the church.

Yours in Christ,

W. S. WADE, P. C.

MOUNT HILLIARD, ALA., July 14, 1875.

LAKE, MISS.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a protracted meeting at Homewood, Miss. We organized a church with twenty members, and added to them ten more by form of Discipline. It was a revival of religion that, we trust, will be lasting in its effects. Fraternally,

C. MCDONALD.

JULY 21, 1875.

"The Delhi District Conference and the Naughty Publisher."

MR. EDITOR: That report was written by me at the request of Bro. Carter, but it is due to him and to the Conference to say that, being written after the adjournment of the Conference, it was never formally approved by him or by the Conference. In the report I briefly related information, gathered from statements made by the members upon the Conference floor, concerning such important interests of the church as missions, Sunday schools, spiritual condition, etc. As a matter of course I mentioned the ADVOCATE and its exceeding popularity in the district, and also that there was much complaint about the subscription department, and that well-authenticated instances were adduced where bills were sent out after the publisher's receipts had been received.

As to the verbiage of the report, I assert that all acknowledgments of funds received, whether through the letter list of the ADVOCATE, or by receipts signed either by the publisher personally or by any of his employees, are his own receipts, having used the phrase to distinguish all such acknowledgments from receipts given by preachers while upon their works. Again, if any delegates to the District Conference or preachers unite in asserting a thing as a fact upon the Conference floor, I consider such a fact "well authenticated." Whenever the publisher calls upon me I am ready to give the names of such parties, and so far consider myself responsible as "secretary." No one, as far as I know, has impugned the motives of the publisher or of any of his employees, but considered such instances merely as mistakes.

J. LANE BORDEN, Secretary.

Union Springs District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The tenth annual session of the Union Springs District Conference convened at Fort Deposit, with S. P. Richardson, presiding elder, in the chair. H. M. Moss was elected secretary, and C. A. Richardson assistant secretary. Every pastor in the district save one reported in person. The lay representation was also good, there being nearly fifty preachers and delegates in attendance.

The inquiry into the state of the church was searching, and we glean from the reports that, while here and there are waste places, the bright spots are so frequent as to comfort and encourage us. We may safely say that the Union Springs district spiritually is on the ascending scale.

The practical and material work of the church is being more faithfully performed. Reports indicate that the finances are in a better condition. It is a significant fact that those charges which have adopted a financial plan generally come up to the assessment, while those without any system are farthest in arrears—Methodists without a method.

The Sunday school interest is gratifying. The church is arising from the dust and ashes in the missionary cause. Places which were almost abandoned have been awakened into new life and activity, and the whole district, in an unprecedented manner, is being indoctrinated into our incomparable church polity.

No true Methodist can attend a District Conference, conducted as was this, and not feel that it is a necessity. It brings together the ministers and official members into such a relation that they cultivate the highest Christian friendship. The preachers need such a meeting for their own spiritual benefit; they need more preaching, and this time they got it from an unexpected source. An old brother, who spent forty-eight accountable years of his life in the hard service of satan, was converted a few years ago. Being elected a delegate, and having covenanted with God never to shrink from a known duty, he rode nearly forty miles to the first District Conference he ever attended. When he arose in his place to speak on the spiritual state of the church, and on Sunday in the experience meeting, such a power accompanied his words that our hearts were kindled with joy to know that Jesus has such faithful witnesses of his redeeming grace.

The preaching was excellent, and such a state of religious feeling pervaded the audience that after the meeting was formally closed on Sunday night, many gathered around the altars and resolved to continue the meeting. Last night (Monday) many were converted. The meeting still continues, and God only knows the result of it.

Flemming Law, T. E. Branscomb, J. A. Giddens and E. B. Wilkinson were elected delegates to the ensuing Alabama Annual Conference. J. R. Rogers, T. B. McCall and W. H. Hasty, alternates.

The most pleasant and profitable of all our District Conferences adjourned after having adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the financial condition of this district demands an increased effort on the part of the stewards in raising the amounts assessed their respective charges, and we urge upon each Quarterly Conference, when they fall short in making a sufficient assessment for the support of the preacher in charge, or fail to pay the assessment against the charge, that they investigate the manner in which they have discharged their duties in the collection of assessments, and see that the charges are supplied with efficient stewards.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that, wherever practicable, there shall be established in every pastoral charge one or more schools under the supervision of Methodist teachers.

Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of the pastors, and the official and private members of the church, not only to patronize our own schools, but use their influence to build up and sustain these Methodist schools, and patronize the colleges, both male and female, now under the care of our Annual Conference.

Resolved, That in accordance with the wish of the people and preachers, and the pressing demands of the work, we respectfully request the Bishop presiding at the next Alabama Annual Conference to attend the next session of the Union Springs District Conference, to be held at Troy.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference are hereby tendered to the Mobile and Montgomery, the Montgomery and Eufaula, and the Mobile and Girard railroads for courtesies extended to members of this Conference.

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of this Conference are due and are hereby tendered to the citizens of Fort Deposit for the kind and cordial hospitalities enjoyed by us all.

Homer College Commencement.

MR. EDITOR: The examination and commencement exercises of Homer College came off June 21-23. The commencement sermon was preached by Rev. M. C. Manly, on Sunday, the twentieth. It was highly spoken of by those who heard it.

I witnessed the examination of some of the classes, and was very much pleased with the manner of examining and the advance made by the pupils.

I met Dr. T. B. Gordon, the president of the college. It was our first meeting. I was very much pleased with him. He has the reputation of being a fine educator—I think justly.

On Tuesday evening, beginning at eight o'clock, the little boys and young men of the primary and academic classes entertained a large audience with declamations. They did well. At the close of these a young man from Arkansas, an old pupil of Prest. Gordon—Mr. Huey—delivered an original address on Progress. He showed genius, thought and cultivation, and was very interesting.

On Wednesday (commencement day) at eleven, a large audience being assembled, eight young men, viz: Messrs. Ed. Blackman, Ed. Evans, S. Acock, D. B. Gunby, J. E. Hulse, E. M. Pipkin, Levi Upton and Hill Taylor, delivered original addresses. I am assured the latter five gave their own productions. Mr. Blackman's subject was: The Want of a Subject. Evan's: Morning, Noon and Night. Acock's: Poetry. Gunby's: Our State. Hedwell upon the position of Louisiana, among the States, from her admission into the Union until the war; her faithfulness to the cause then espoused, her sufferings and the despotism that has enchained her since the war, and her prospects for the future, with some suggestions as to the course to success. Hulse's: The Future. Well gotten up and well delivered. Pipkin's: The Press. An old subject, but made very interesting. Levi Upton's: The Problem of Life—Its Solution. How to be happy, the problem; usefulness, the solution. Taylor's, the last: Eloquence. He discriminated between eloquence and oratory, presenting the idea that eloquence might appeal without words—that it is the language of the soul.

Then came the annual literary address by Prof. C. T. Gordon, principal of Minden Male Academy. Subject: The Benefits of Education as Shown in the Developments of the Nineteenth Century. It was lengthy, but interesting and instructive; some humor with reference to the customs and fashions of the present day.

At night a supper was given in honor of Prest. Gordon and Prof. Calhoun, by the citizens of Homer and vicinity, as a token of their esteem and confidence. It was a great success. The table (a cross,) forty-eight feet one way and eighty the other, was sufficient for two hundred persons at once. It was very neatly decorated, well lighted, and well furnished with an abundant supply of the nicest edibles—meats, breadstuffs, sweetmeats, salads and confectioneries, all in great variety. There were six hundred persons present. The time was passed quietly, and by most joyfully.

The board of trustees held its annual session—very harmonious and satisfactory. Arrangements have been made to keep Prest. Gordon during 1876. The past term has been truly gratifying to the friends of Homer College. Her prospects brighten. Matriculates, sixty-two. The local patronage is united, and the trustees are determined to use every just measure for the prosperity of the institution. The fall term opens on the first Wednesday in September.

The commencement of the Masonic Female College, at Homer, came off on Thursday, June 24. All well pleased. This institution is under the supervision of Mr. Thomas Sligh and his accomplished wife. It claims the patronage of the surrounding country.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1875.

THE POOR MAN AND THE FIEND.

BY REV. MR. MACLELLAN.

A fiend once met a humble man
At night, in the cold, dark street,
And led him into a palace fair,
Where music circled sweet;
And light and warmth cheered the wanderer's heart,
From frost and darkness screened,
Till his brain grew mad beneath the joy,
And he worshiped before the fiend.

The poor man had health, more dear than gold,
Stout bone and muscle strong,
That neither faint nor weary grew
To toil the livelong day long;
And the fiend, his god, cried hoarse and loud:
"Thy strength thou must forego,
Or thou no worshiper art of mine!"
And the poor man ne'er said: "No!"

Three children blessed the poor man's home—
Stray angels dropped on earth;
The fiend beheld their sweet blue eyes,
And he laughed in fearful mirth;
"Bring forth thy little ones," quoth he,
"My godhead with it eat
I want an evening sacrifice!"
And the poor man ne'er said: "No!"

A young wife sat by the poor man's fire,
Who, since she blushed a bride,
Had gilded his sorrow and brightened his joys—
His guardian, friend and guide.
Foul fall the fiend!—he gave command:
"Come, mix the cup of woe;
Bid thy young wife drain it to the dregs;"
And the poor man ne'er said: "No!"

O misery now for this poor man!
O deepest of misery!
Next the fiend his godlike reason took,
And among beast-fed lay;
And, when the sentient mind was gone,
He pilfered his soul also;
And—marvel of marvels!—he murmured not;
The poor man ne'er said: "No!"

Now men and matrons in your prime,
Children and grandsires old,
Come listen, with soul as well as ear,
This saying wildest I unfold;
O listen! till your brain whirls round,
And your heart is sick to ache
That in England's isle all this befel.
And the name of the fiend was—DRINK!

Spiritual Happiness.

There are no pleasures on earth worthy to be compared with those enjoyed by the obedient children of God, who are so often pitied as melancholy and miserable persons on account of their strict religious observances.

The first source of happiness, then, peculiar to the faithful in Christ is the excellent knowledge they have attained. God, in all his adorable perfections—in the stupendous works which he has made, in the heavens above and on the earth beneath, in his consoling and encouraging word which he has revealed by divine inspiration, in the redemption he has provided, and in the eternal blessings he has promised; God, the Son, in all his original glory, and afterward marvelous humility, while sojourning here below, as witnessed by his most benevolent purposes and his inimitable meditations which marked every step of conduct while laboring here in behalf of depraved humanity; God, the Holy Ghost, in all the gifts and graces in goodness exercised, with the realities of an invisible and eternal world—these constitute the pleasing subjects of meditation for the true believer.

This vast pleasure, which is imparted to the child of God with his first acquaintance with divine truth, increases as he advances in the same direction. There is a very sensible progress in divine no less than in human science; first a faint or confused view of the truths of God, and next a clear perception of their matchless excellence and various usefulness; or, perhaps, a first dependence on them, mixed with some degree of hesitation and fear, but afterward a full assurance of understanding and hope, with the comprehending of the breadths and lengths, the heights and depths of what before was only very superficially known. Such a progress is inseparable from perseverance in the faith of Christ, and a diligent use of the word of God and of prayer, which never fail to prove a spring of fresh and increasing delight.

True believers experience, in their knowledge, contentment in every condition of life, which is a preservative from the force of unruly passions, and a shield against the assaults of the worst and most dangerous of enemies. Fortified in such a manner, they are inspired with a supernatural firmness of mind, and cheered in the darkest hours of distress, but still more of immense value when in the last throes of departing life from all pertaining to earthly mortality.

"Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory." "I am filled with comfort; I am exceedingly joyful in all my tribulation."

This sublime knowledge enriches the souls of all real believers in Christ Jesus; yes, even of the poorest and most ignorant who faithfully serve the Lord. It is God alone who communicates this knowledge, and all those who make application for it in believing prayer are equally sure to obtain it, which is a lasting source of the purest delight to replenish the mind. This at once is positively asserted and emphatically recommended.

"Happy is the man who findeth wisdom, and getteth understanding, for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, or the gain thereof than fine gold." "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

Who can give any real credit to the positive assertions of holy writ, or who can consider the nature and qualities of Christian knowledge, and not perceive that true Christians are the happiest people on earth? Who can impartially weigh these things and for a moment question who are the persons that now pass their time in the most pleasant and joyous manner possible? O how immensely large, how inexhaustibly rich is this inheritance to which real believers in Christ are adopted. It is highly reasonable to conclude that true Christians may enjoy peculiar happiness in this life because conscious of the certainty of shortly reaching their eternal state, so immensely superior and different from what the careless and ungodly pursue while here below, who, alas! hardened unto death, are to meet with a full reward for their deeds done in the frowns of an angry God, and in the feelings of a conscience that knows no rest. To the former this wholesome lesson affords much satisfaction: "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God—a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." No sooner absent from the body than the spirits are present with the Lord.

While, then, the advantages of true faith are so great, who can experience the honest feelings of humanity and not breathe out to God the apostle's ardent prayer that all who hear the sound of the gospel this day were not almost, but altogether persuaded to become Christians. Ye young and gay, ye rich and poor, be no longer prejudiced against the precious gospel of Christ, as if it were too strict in rule of duty for you to walk according to its requirements. Allow yourselves to be entreated to examine it more closely, and to make a fair trial of submission to it. An assemblage of promises, privileges and pleasures, suitable to all your wants and adequate to all your desires, are designed to unite your hearts unto him, that you may ever love his name. These pleasures are not always the same, yet at their lowest ebb are superior to everything the world can afford. Entertain no longer the false opinion that you must be melancholy and miserable if deprived of these sources of gratification. Steadfastly attend to the consolations in Christ, in the comforts of his love, and in the fellowship of the Holy Ghost. Call upon God, that you may lay aside all wickedness or sinful indulgences, so that God's inestimable blessings may immediately be your portion and have place in your hearts.

COTTAGE HOME, Waynesboro, Miss.

Itinerants' Wives.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking of the beautiful memoir written by our good old "grandfather" in the Lord, Dr. L. Pierce, on his ninety-first birthday, where he gives thanks unto the Lord for his goodness and mercy in allowing him to live in usefulness so long. It was his deference to his wife that I thought so beautiful. Not enough has been said, I think, about the good of itinerants' wives. I feel as he does on this subject. As I am the daughter of an itinerant Methodist, I think I know something of the trials they are called on to endure. I lost my beloved mother at an early day. Still I have cherished her image, and well remember her many trials, and how well and cheerfully she bore them. Many are now living who remember her noble works far better than I do, because of my tender age; and her good works were done in secret. She was a Miss Elizabeth Patere, of South Carolina, and married my father, Mr. T. H. W., who at that time was one of the teachers of the Oxford College. Afterward he felt that he was called to preach—to join the band of faithful workers in God's vineyard. Mother was not willing—at first very reluctant. She reasoned, as any of us who did not feel the call: We are poor, with one child, dependent on the salary of her husband for a living. But "God moves in a mysterious way." She was powerfully converted about the year 1837, and then felt that she could do anything for God. She gave her full consent, and united heartily in the work of sacrifice and toil with her husband, willing to rely on the word of promise for temporal support; and for the remainder of her life she was to him a helpmate indeed. Father was sent, for the most of the time, upon work that did not support him; and but for the aid she rendered by teaching school—at the same time attending to her domestic matters with the strictest economy—he must have been driven from the itinerant field. But thus did she hold up his hands and cheer him on in his work of saving souls; and to-day I know of many men of usefulness who are indebted to her for their education. She loved the poor, and if any were in reach of her school she hunted them up and made them come in, often giving them not only education, but clothing and food. She also took in boarders, and the rising sun found her at the piano teaching, and the hours of night found her at work, as she could not find time in the day for all her scholars. So, by early rising and teaching late at night, she got through her many duties. These duties were never too pressing for her to give a helping hand to the afflicted and distressed. How trying, when the year drew to its close, to break up all ties of affection and journey to a land of strangers, to go over the same thing year after year. I remember her looking with loving gaze on her flower-yard. "I must leave you for others to love," she said. I said: "Mamma, why do you always plant flowers and fruit wherever we live, when you know we must soon leave them?" "Oh, my child, we must not be selfish. We must leave behind us something that will give pleasure. Perhaps some poor sick one may come when we are gone, and bless the hand that planted these roses." Often, since I have grown older and health failed, have I thought of her planting flowers and fruit along the wayside of life for others to enjoy.

I could write a long, long while if I would tell of all the sacrifices of the itinerant's wife. The many heartaches, given by thoughtless hands, no one can tell but an eye-witness to their daily walks and all they endure. It is locked in their own heart, and God alone knows all. It is many years since my beloved mother passed away, singing the glad song of rejoicing as she met her Redeemer on the bright shores of Jordan; but she left behind a memory never to be forgotten, though her family of little ones have been forgotten. I often meet on the journey of life prosperous persons who owe all their foundation of education to her, and wonder if she is forgotten, and does her memory only dwell in the heart of her few remaining children?—for some of them have passed over together with our father to the bright world above.

Dear friends, when you look upon the weary face of a minister's wife, think of the many trials she is called on to endure, and try to lighten her burden. That you do not thoughtlessly add the last straw is the wish of one who knows something of their trials.

MRS. SALLIE BLANCHARD.

JAMESTOWN, Chattahoochee, Ga.

The Excursion Trip.

Prof. James was through with his evening lessons, and sat in Mrs. Angel's beautiful parlor to rest awhile before he should return home. The all engrossing theme just now was an excursion trip, gotten up for the benefit of the Odd Fellows' Association. Mrs. Angel, her sister Fannie and the professor were discussing the subject.

What a delightful trip it will be! "Mrs. James must go," said Mrs. Angel. "Yes," said the professor, "I would like for her to go;" but there was a struggle in his heart when he thought how poorly he could provide expensive pleasures for his patient wife. Perhaps there was a tone of sadness in his reply that touched Mrs. Angel, for she insisted, and was determined, in the nobility of her soul, that Mrs. James should go.

The professor was proud of his wife, and knew well she possessed qualities that fitted her for higher stations in life than he had been able of late to secure her. He was elated with the idea of some recreation for his wife, and, putting his trust in his God, went home with buoyant spirits to tell her she must prepare to go. "Indeed," said she, "the idea is ridiculous. I cannot go." "But you must," said the fond husband. "My needs are too many," said she; "and we cannot spare so much to gratify pleasure." "Never mind, Sallie," said he hopefully; "you consent to go and our heavenly Father will provide." So the patient lady, after some consideration, concluded she would go.

She had been kept very closely at home for a long time. With her own hands she had performed all the domestic work for her family. She had now four little darlings to watch over and care for. Her husband had purchased a beautiful lot in a quiet village, and they were living with the closest economy in order to complete a lovely cottage that was to be their "home-nest" in the future.

Mrs. James had denied herself every luxury and many comforts, and used every energy of mind and soul to curtail their expenses. She had even denied herself the annual visit to her childhood's home, where a devoted mother and loving sisters and her brother anxiously desired her cheerful companionship. But she would say: "It is better for me to have a home than enjoy these." So, praying and hoping for better days, she was daily growing purer under the clouds of adversity. No wonder, then, when the pleasures of an excursion were presented, that she objected. She had been accustomed, in these latter days, to school herself to self-denial. But she had warm friends who appreciated her worth and knew her circumstances, and they were determined she should go and enjoy the respite of the anticipated excursion. Kind Mrs. Angel would take care of the children, except little Mary, who was to go with her mother. Miss Fannie sent her an unexpected $10 that would defray her expenses. Mrs. B. furnished her with a beautiful dress and hat, and other friends aided in providing all her needs; while a kind gentleman conveyed her to and from the depot, which was some distance from her home, and the gallant Mr. McD. tendered his services as an escort for the day.

Oh, what a day of happy enjoyment! The great iron horse carried them swiftly to the beautiful Hill City. Mrs. James met with many friends from afar, some from her own native village, with whom she held sweet converse. When they arrived at the city an elegant boat awaited them, which sailed up the river forty-two miles, where they had a splendid dinner. After a day of great social enjoyment they returned home in the evening. Many were the happy hearts on that excursion trip, but none were happier and more grateful for a kind Providence and generous friends than Mrs. James and little Mary. She had learned the lesson of patient trust at home; now she felt the good Father had given her pleasure abroad, and she returned home with a thankful heart.

Thank God! there are noble Christians in our land who will not only meet the requirements of duty, but will give pleasure to the poor. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

A Union Sunday School.

MR. EDITOR: We have a union Sabbath school at Downsville, La. A permanent organization took place on the eighth day of April last. The officers, teachers and members are of different denominations, but, laying aside every denominational prejudice, and with love for God and each other, desiring above all things to get and impart a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, we have co-operated together. The result is that God has blessed us, and we are having a harmonious and flourishing Sabbath school. Our school numbers at present between eighty-five and one hundred members, and is gradually increasing.

On last Saturday, the third instant, the school met, according to previous appointment, to enjoy a Sabbath school celebration. The members of the school met at the church, and were called to order by the superintendent. After a few preliminary remarks, headed by instrumental music, the school marched in procession to Reynolds' Grove, and met there a large and respectful audience, to which the Rev. R. T. Parish introduced Prof. J. Lane Borden, of Trenton, La., who, taking as a text, "Gather the children together," delivered a Sabbath school address such as seldom emanates from human lips. We think the Spirit accompanied his words—that they came from the heart, and reached the heart of both saint and sinner.

After the minds of the people had enjoyed such a grand feast, the baskets of rich provisions were opened, and a large table was soon groaning beneath its heavy burden of refreshments for the body. When these were dispatched the audience was again seated, and, in compliance with the request of Rev. R. T. Parish, sang that beautiful hymn: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," etc. After the benediction by Prof. Borden the school marched back to the church, where, after appointing a committee of communication, it was dismissed by the superintendent, and dispersed with thankful hearts, overflowing with gratitude to him who ruleth all things well.

MR. WILLARD CARPENTER, of Evansville, Ind., announces that he will give $1,000,000 to found a free college for poor students, clothing, tuition and food to be furnished for nothing. Provision is made for the support of a faculty of instructors, and the whole fund is to be placed in the hands of ten trustees, five of whom shall be residents of Indiana, and five of adjoining States.

IN REPLY to a recent anti-papal manifesto of Karl Blind, Garibaldi writes: "I believe there is not in all the world a country less Catholic than Italy. Government and the upper classes affect a Catholic devotion which they do not feel. As to the masses of the people, they do not believe in Catholicism; and in the popish churches one only sees bigoted old women."

THE true wealth of a community lies in the integrity of its citizens; and its chief honor arises not from the possession of great riches, but the possession of true men.

Obituaries.

CAROLINE WILBURN, wife of John A. Wilburn, and daughter of William and Mary Townsend, was born in Robeson county, N. C., May 5, 1827; came with her parents to Mississippi in 1837; and was married September 29, 1848. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1850. As a member she was exemplary and consistent. Heartfelt and practical godliness was the religion she professed and lived. She was a kind and affectionate companion, a devoted mother and a benevolent neighbor. Chiefly was the prominent trait of her character. She loved all, and was beloved by all. Her hand was open to do good. Oblivious of nothing that would cool the burning brow or soothe the aching heart if trouble's cry was heard, the sympathizing sister was at hand to aid the sick and whisper Jesus in the ear of the dying. If the church prospered she rejoiced; if Zion languished she wept and prayed. May God give us all the fervency, zeal and faith of our departed sister. Her lamp, always trimmed, grew brighter and brighter to the day of death. I never shall forget the refreshings from the Lord during a revival at Friendship, in September, 1874, in which our sister was divinely blessed, being anointed from on high, and, having caught a glimpse within the vail, shouted: "Glory to God on high!" and spoke in thrilling notes to sinners of Jesus and the resurrection. So divinely did every feature shine that it called forth the remark that that was full redemption in Jesus Christ. She said, while shaking off the cumbrous shackles of mortality, that the same Comforter that blessed her on that eventful occasion was with her to-night up the dark valley of death, and softened her dying pillow. She now rests, without a wave of trouble, in the family grave-yard, in sight of the residence of her beloved husband and precious children, to await the momentous hour when God shall call, by his archangel, the parents and children, and the nations of the earth and sea, to stand at his tribunal.

MRS. LOUISA ADELAIDE BENJAMINE was born in the city of New York, February 29, 1808. She lived more than twenty years in that city. Thence she removed to New Orleans, where she spent ten or twelve years. Thence she came to Mobile in 1850, and in 1865 she left Mobile and spent the remainder of her days on earth in Whistler, Ala. Here she breathed her last at four o'clock, June 19, A. D. 1875. Sister Benjamine, whose maiden name was O'Neal, was married twice—first to Edward B. Stewart. Her second marriage was with Walter C. Benjamine, whom she outlived about three years.

We know but little of Sister Benjamine's religious life when young, only that she was brought up in the Roman Church. In 1850 she joined the South Ward Methodist Episcopal Church South in Mobile, which is now St. Paul's. For five years (1861-65) she was matron of the Protestant Orphan Asylum in Mobile. If she put any great stress on the past in regard to her spiritual prospects, she never spoke of it.

She exhibited no fear of death, and often said if it was God's will she preferred to depart. Often before she was taken sick she expressed this sentiment. At the last, when she was rational, she said: "All is bright; not a cloud between me and my Savior."

Whereas, It has thus pleased almighty God to remove Sister Benjamine from our midst; And whereas, This Sunday school has lost a faithful teacher, the church a true and zealous member, and the community a sincere friend; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Whistler Methodist Sunday school, That while we bow with humble resignation to this dispensation of God, we feel that our loss is very great.

NATHANIEL C. DORTCH was born in the parish of Feliciana, La., September 8, 1804, and died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. John W. Bradley, in Milam county, Texas, April 28, 1875. His disease was both paralysis and dropsy. The deceased had been for many years a member of the Methodist Church—at one time a class-leader. His almost lifetime vocation was that of school teaching. During the space of forty-eight years he taught school at various points in Louisiana and Mississippi, and latterly in Texas, whither he went in 1870. And here, as he speaks in a letter of there being no church of his choice convenient to him, it is probable that he had not renewed his connection with the church at the time of his death. But those best acquainted with him are comforted in the belief that he still retained his connection with the mystical body of Christ, and is therefore numbered now among the church triumphant in heaven. In his last lingering illness he conversed freely on the subject of religion; expressed his willingness to die; read his well-marked Bible daily as long as he was able, and died with the blessed volume underneath his pillow. Three children—two daughters and a son—still survive him. May they, with their households, all meet him at last in our Father's house above.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19, 1875.

THE subject of this sketch, THOS. TOOMY, was born on the fifth day of January, 1805, in Sevierville, Tenn., and died, at his home in Wayne county, Miss., on the eighteenth day of March, 1875, aged seventy years, two months and thirteen days. He was married to Miss Carollue Havis on the fourth day of July, 1838.

Bro. Toomy was converted and joined the Methodist Church in early life. The exact time of his conversion is not known to the writer. I asked his son if he knew when his father was converted. His reply was: "No; father has been a Christian ever since I can remember." He was a man of fervent piety. Being afflicted for a number of years, his faith in God was fully tested, but it never wavered. I visited him several times during his sickness, and always found him the same meek, suffering, patient Christian. He desired to live on account of his children, but was submissive to the divine will.

Bro. Toomy was remarkable for his intelligence. He was well versed in the current literature of the times, especially that of our own church, and was well informed in the doctrines of the church. His death was a Christian triumph. He left his dying testimony in writing, from which I take the following extract:

"My Dear Children: I must leave you. I leave you in the hands of the Lord. Do not grieve for me. I feel that the time has come for me to leave this world of trouble, and I have no fears. The way before me is clear. I promised your mother to meet her in heaven. I feel that I will safely land there. I want you all to meet me there, where we will make an undivided family."

After calling all his children to him, and giving each a dying kiss, he quietly fell asleep. So passed away our brother to the bright regions beyond the river. May God bless and protect the orphan children.

D. A. LITTLE.

DIED, at the residence of her son, Joseph H. Byars, in Oktibbeha county, Miss., July 3, 1875, Mother SUSAN A. BYARS. Mother Byars was born in the State of South Carolina in the year 1804, professed faith in Christ in the days of her girlhood, attached herself to the Missionary Baptist Church, after which she married her husband, David Byars, in the year 1824. Up to the time of her husband's death, which took place in June, 1839, they together were exemplary members of the above-named church. After her husband's death she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, her children all having joined that church, in which she lived up to the time of her death without a blot upon her Christian character. Mother Byars loved her church and her doctrines, and her ministers always found a home at her house. She was kind and very affectionate to her children and neighbors. But this was not her abiding home. God had a place in the mansions above, where before her more than half her family had gone. Her place is vacant. Her children mourn, but not as those who have no hope, because she died as she lived—a true Christian—at the ripe age of seventy-two years. Let the will of the Lord be done. She leaves four children to mourn her loss.

ROBERT L., oldest son of T. G. and Jane A. Hartheock, died, at his father's residence in Yazoo county, Miss., April 7, 1875, in the eleventh year of his age. Robert truly obeyed his parents in the Lord.

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved scholar we (the Locust Grove Sabbath school) have sustained a loss which we deeply deplore; yet we bow submissively to this dispensation of the divine will, and feel that the Lord doeth all things well.

Resolved, That this school hereby tender to the sorrowing family of the deceased our deepest sympathy for the irreparable loss they have sustained, and in testimony of which we direct that they be furnished with a copy of these resolutions, that the same be recorded upon the register of this Sabbath school, and that the same be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

FERNS.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

If trees are Nature's thoughts or dreams,
And witness how her great heart yearns,
Then she has only shown, it seems,
The softest fantasies in ferns!

Those low, green boughs—what simply grace,
What wavy, lissome charm they wear!
Delicate, supple, frail as lace,
And pliant to each passing air!

Though sweet to see when, there or here,
Along some common meadowed way,
They throng in feathery jungles near
Some stolid bowlder's bulk of gray,

Yet, ah! no light their spray so serves
As when, where clustering branches cross,
I meet its shadowy, silvery curves
On spaces of dark, moonlit moss!

For here quick Fancy finds a bower
Where she can watch, in pictured wise,
As Oberon squeeze the fatal flower
In poor Titania's drowsing eyes!

And nimble fay and prankSome elf
Flash vaguely past at every turn,
Or, weird and wee, sits Puck himself,
With legs akimbo, on a fern!

Dr. Bethune.

Several interesting anecdotes are related of Dr. Bethune, in the form of "Personal Recollections," by Rev. J. Wheaton Smith, D. D., in a communication to the National Baptist, from which we make the following extracts:

The last sermon I heard from his lips was preached from his old pulpit, at the northeast corner of Tenth and Filbert streets, of a Sunday afternoon. He had been at my service, in Spruce street, in the morning, coming into the gallery quietly just as I was beginning to preach, that he might not embarrass me by his presence. He need not have feared, as I should have known he was listening with the kindness and charity so characteristic of his heart. In the afternoon I went to hear him, and met him after the sermon at the steps of the pulpit, with the request that he would preach for me that evening. He readily assented, but declared I did not deserve it, as I had never preached for him. I told him he was mistaken, and reminded him of a time when we had exchanged pulpits in the wilderness of Maine, he preaching for me in the "log school-house," and I preaching for him, with a stump for a pulpit, to a company of lumbermen. "Oh, yes," he added, "I remember; and, by the way, did that fellow ever find his jack-knife?" "What fellow?" I asked. "Why," he said, "that Sunday when I preached for you in the log school-house, just as I pronounced the benediction, a man arose and said 'that he had lost a fast-rate jack-knife; that if any member of that congregation had found it he wished they would just sing out.'" The incident may serve to illustrate the freedom of the doctor in preaching to such congregations. I have often wished that some of those log school-house sermons might have been preserved verbatim.

On one occasion he was among the invited speakers at a New England dinner, in New York. It was a weakness of the doctor's not to be overfond of New England. A Knickerbocker rather than a Puritan, he always insisted that "Plymouth Rock was the blarney stone of the Yankees." The speaking of the evening was of the usual kind, dilating with fondness for the native soil, and somewhat extravagant in its statements of the number of those who, although denizens of the native soil, had found their way into all the earth; so that New England drovers might be found on the Andes, and Connecticut clock peddlers on the steppes of Tartary. When the doctor was called out, near the close of the festivities, he began by saying "that the speeches of the gentlemen who had addressed them might be divided into two classes—the first of which dwelt upon the love of New Englanders for their native soil, and the second of which enumerated the multitude of them who had run off and left it. How this was to be reconciled he could not say, unless it might be on the theory of a story he had heard about two Scotchmen, who came to this country some years ago. At breakfast one morning, a few weeks after their arrival, one of them wore a strangely troubled look. The other, noticing it, asked him: 'Andrew, man, what's the matter wi' ye this morning?' 'I had a fearfu' dream in the nicht.' 'What did ye dream, mon?' 'I dinna like to tell.' 'Did ye dream ye saw the dell, mon?' 'No, it was far, waur than that.' 'Did ye dream your mither was dead?' 'No, it was far waur than that.' 'Well, what did ye dream, mon?' 'Why, I dreamed I was hame again.'" Your readers will easily conjecture that this audacity of humor brought down the house with thunders of applause.

On another occasion, when on our way to our favorite resort, for a little fly-fishing, in eastern Maine, we stopped over night in Boston, where the doctor was to speak at some anniversary meeting. As was not unusual with him, he was a little late in his appearance at the gathering, and the speaker next preceding him on the programme was evidently talking against time on his arrival. Seeing the doctor walk up the aisle, he suddenly brought his remarks to a close by saying "that the distinguished gentleman who would next address them had now arrived, and he could not understand why he (the speaker) had been appointed to precede him, unless it might be on the principle by which the smaller wheel of a carriage is made to precede the larger." There was a slight twinkle in the doctor's eye as he unbuttoned and laid off his great brown overcoat, and commenced by saying: "Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: The closing remark of my friend who has just addressed you reminds me of a Highlander who, on a visit to Glasgow, caught his first glimpse of a four-wheeled carriage. Fixing his eye with amazement on one of the forward wheels, he exclaimed: 'Weel done, little wheel; the big wheel'l nae catch you.'" A happier opening could hardly have been made, even had there been a month to consider it.

The Sick Man.

In a letter to his brother-in-law, Hon. Philo Parsons, of Detroit, published in the Tribune of that city, Rev. H. N. Barnum, of Harpoot, gives the clearest version of the situation in Turkey that has come under our notice:

According to all the laws of political economy the Turkish government ought to complete its race very soon. Taxation is growing more and more burdensome, and in many cases is going to the extent of impoverishment and of drying up the sources of revenue; and, on the other hand, the government is getting deeper and deeper into debt every year abroad. She is trying to be a first-class European power. The interest upon the foreign debt would soon exhaust all the gold in the country, except that foreign gold is borrowed, and generally at ruinous rates, to pay interest as it becomes due. This process cannot be kept up many years longer; one would suppose the English and French must be blind to the real state of the country or they could not be persuaded to loan money at any rate of interest. False representations are made abroad. Very much is said of the "vast resources" of the country. If they exist in any extraordinary degree, I have never seen them. The mines, which might be a source of considerable revenue if sold, are so badly managed by government agents that it is doubtful if the receipts equal the expenditures. The government cannot trust its own agents to collect the taxes, but they are sold to the highest bidder in each district, and the man who buys them mercilessly oppresses the people in order to make a large profit. This the government winks at, or there would be less competition among purchasers the next year. The awful famine to the west of us is likely to prove a serious matter for the financial stability of the government, for, aside from the fearful loss of life, the whole district is losing the power of production for years to come. Farm stock is largely disposed of, agricultural implements have been disposed of, and even houses have been despoiled of their timber for the purchase of bread. Amid all this there has been for a few years past a growing feeling of independence of foreign powers. The European embassies at Constantinople have much less influence than formerly; the government is more jealous than formerly of foreign interference, and also with this is a gradual drawing back toward the traditional policy of other days, at least in the direction of religious intolerance. The Turks appear to be more suspicious of Protestantism than heretofore. It is more difficult to secure permission to build a church, or a school-house even. There is no open opposition. That would not be according to the spirit of Turkish diplomacy. Fair promises are made, but the legal restrictions and formalities are so many that it is very difficult to accomplish anything unless one is able to overcome his scruples against bribery. A committee, as you know, is to come from Great Britain, from the Evangelical Alliance, for the express purpose of seeking an audience with the Sultan to endeavor to persuade him to grant a wide religious freedom, as he is bound to do by the pledges made years ago. What will be the future of the Turkish government no man can tell, and what is to take place, and how many changes can be made for the better, as things now stand, is equally dark. My own belief is that the gospel is to do more toward settling the "Eastern question" than anything else. May God greatly multiply its power!

A VALUABLE SECRET.—It is related of Franklin that from the window of his office in Philadelphia he noticed a mechanic, among a number of others, at work on a house which was being erected close by, who always appeared to be in a merry humor, and who had a kind and cheerful smile for every one he met. Let the day be ever so cold, gloomy or sunless, the happy smile danced like a sunbeam on his cheerful countenance. Meeting him one day, Franklin requested to know the secret of his constant happy flow of spirits. "It's no secret, doctor," the man replied. "I've got one of the best of wives, and when I go to work she always gives me a kind word of encouragement and a blessing with her parting kiss; and when I go home she is sure to meet me with a smile and a kiss of welcome; and then tea is sure to be ready; and as we chat in the evening I find she has been doing so many little things through the day to please me that I cannot find it in my heart to speak an unkind word or give an unkind look to anybody." And Franklin adds: "What an influence, then, hath woman over the heart of man, to soften it, and make it the fountain of cheerful and pure emotions. Speak gently, then; a happy smile and a kind word or greeting after the toils of the day are over cost nothing, and go far toward making a home happy and peaceful."

A CERTAIN eminent lawyer is celebrated at the bar for the following mode of examining a witness: "Now pray listen to the question I am going to ask you. Be attentive; remember, you will answer as you please; and remember, I don't care a rush what you answer," etc. One of the judges, somewhat tired of the monotony of his exordiums, one day accosted him in the street: "Ha, is that you, ——? Now pray listen to the question I am going to ask you. Be attentive; remember, you will answer as you please; and remember, I don't care a rush what you answer.—How are you?"

AN Irish housemaid who was sent to call a gentleman to breakfast found him using a tooth-brush. "Well, is he coming?" asked the lady. "Yes, ma'am, directly. He is just sharpening his teeth."

The Sleeping Church.

Mr. Moody relates the following: "There was a little story going the round of the American press that made a great impression upon me as a father. A father took his little child out into the field one Sabbath, and he lay down under a beautiful shady tree, it being a hot day. The little child ran about gathering wild flowers and little blades of grass, and, coming to its father, it said: 'Pretty! pretty!' At last the father fell asleep, and while he was sleeping the little child wandered away. When he awoke his first thought was: Where is my child? He looked all around, but he could not see him. He shouted at the top of his voice, and all he heard was the echo of his own voice. Running to a little hill, he looked around and shouted again, but all he heard was the echo of his own voice. No response! Then, going to a precipice at some distance, he looked down, and there upon the rocks and briers he saw the mangled form of his loved child. He rushed to the spot, took up the lifeless corpse and hugged it to his bosom, and accused himself of being the murderer of his own child. While he was sleeping his child had wandered over the precipice. I thought, as I heard that: What a picture of the church of God! How many fathers and mothers, how many Christian men are sleeping now, while their children wander over the terrible precipice a thousand times worse than that precipice, right into the bottomless pit of hell. Father, where is your boy to-night? It may be, just out here in some public house; it may be, reeling through the streets of London, drunk; it may be, pressing on down to a drunkard's grave. How many fathers and mothers are there in London—yes, praying Christians too—whose children are wandering away while they are slumbering and sleeping? Is it not time that the church of God should wake up and come to the help of the Lord as one man, and strive to beat back those dark waves of death that roll through our streets, bearing upon their bosom the noblest young men we have? O, my God, wake up the church! And let us trim our lights and go forth and work for the kingdom of God."

THE SCENE.—Recurring to the transaction itself, we have a grand theme for the imagination to paint. Think of six hundred thousand adult men, besides women and children, marshaled in equal divisions on two opposing mountains, eight hundred feet high and one-third of a mile from one summit to the other; the ark surrounded by the priests and Levites in the intermediate valley; the solemn rehearsal of the blessings and cursings in tones loud and clear, in the hearing of the gathered thousands; and then the thundering "Amen," resounding from both mountain summits. What could have been more impressive! How must this scene have fixed the attention, especially of the young, and solemnly deepened the conviction. This law is our law; these blessings are to be our reward, and these curses our doom, according as we obey or disobey this law of our own holy Lord God! Whatever power of impression upon the human mind is possible through the senses—the eye, the ear, and the personal utterance of awe-inspiring words—is all present here in its intensest form. Truly here are scenes for every eye to see; sounds for every ear to hear; scope for the fullest utterance of every human voice. Here is everything to bring out a volume of common sympathy, rolling deep and strong, sustained throughout the entire transaction, the whole to be remembered through all future years as the great religious meeting of their lives.—Dr. Cowles.

A BAKED BIBLE.—There is a Bible in Lucas county, O., says the Unitarian Herald, which was preserved by being baked in a loaf of bread. It now belongs to a Mr. Schebolt, who is a native of Bohemia, in Austria. This baked Bible was formerly the property of his grandmother, who was a faithful Protestant Christian. During one of the seasons when the Roman Catholics were persecuting the Protestants in that country a law was passed that every Bible in the hands of the people should be given up to the priest, that it might be burned. Then those who loved their Bibles had to contrive different plans in order to try and save the precious book. When the priests came round to search the house it happened to be baking day. Mrs. Schebolt, the grandmother of the present owner of the Bible, had a large family. She had just prepared a great batch of dough, when she heard that the priests were coming; she took her precious Bible, wrapped it carefully up, and put it in the center of a huge mass of dough, which was to fill her largest bread tin, and stowed it away in the oven and baked it. The priests came and searched the house carefully through, but they did not find the Bible. When the search was over, and the danger passed, the Bible was taken out of the loaf and found uninjured.

THERE is a poet who says: "I'm sitting sadly on the strand, That stretches to the water's brink; And as the day slips slowly by, I idly fold my hands and think." While he is sitting on the strand with idly folded hands his family at home may be suffering for the necessaries of life. He should skirmish around, before the day slips slowly by, and secure a job at digging a cellar.

ANOTHER anecdote of Mr. Gerrit Smith relates that on one occasion, when a visitor had outstayed his welcome and had become a preternatural nuisance, Mr. Smith in the morning prayed for a blessing to descend upon "our visiting brother, who will this day depart from us." And he departed. Such a pin as that was sharp enough to be felt by the most pachydermatous of bores.

Religious Intelligence.

—The proposed union of the English Presbyterian Church and the English branch of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has again failed.

—The Fanfulla, a ministerial organ in Rome, authentically states that the Pope has resolved to convoke the Vatican Council again at an early date, to discuss ecclesiastical reforms.

—A special dispatch from Madrid to the Daily News reports that the papal nuncio has made a formal demand for the restoration of Catholic unity in Spain, and the government has replied that it is resolved to maintain liberty of worship.

—The Jewish Messenger says that some wealthy Israelites in Rome are discussing the feasibility of erecting a rabbinical seminary in that city, and the indications are that soon, in the vicinity of the Vatican, a college for Jewish ministers will be established.

—In an address delivered by Mr. I. T. Dimery, at Monrovia, entitled "The Condition and Wants of Liberia," it was stated that there is not one good day school under an efficient teacher in all the republic. The government pays its teachers a small salary in depreciated currency, and the education of the masses has almost been abandoned.

—The Countess of Aberdeen has established a mission, to be called the Gordon Memorial Mission, in memory of her son, Hon. I. H. Gordon. The mission consists of a missionary and his wife and three lay assistants. It is to be located in the Zululand, Natal, South Africa. The Countess of Aberdeen and her family have contributed about $50,000 to this object.

—In the Synod of the Irish Episcopal Church, during a discussion concerning a revision of the prayer-book, a motion was made that when the word "priest" is used it be understood as "presbyter." An amendment to this, proposing to substitute "minister" wherever the officiating clergyman is mentioned, was voted down, the clergy giving 40 yeas to 104 nays, and the laity 106 yeas to 45 nays. The original motion seems to have met general acceptance.

—Another American, Mr. Pearsall Smith, has attained to a wide reputation as an evangelist. His success in England attracted the attention of some Germans who heard him in England, by whom he was invited to Berlin. He does not speak German, but has succeeded, through an interpreter, in exciting a deep religious interest in the Prussian capital. At length the audiences became so large that the Emperor opened the garrison church, the largest in the city, for Mr. Smith's use.

—At the last meeting held in East End, London, Mr. Moody said that his visit to England had now extended over twenty-three months, during which time no accident had occurred. They had, indeed, heard of people going mad, but had seen none. Great as was the present revival, he believed it was only at its commencement, and that a mightier would soon follow, still more strongly to manifest the hand of God in the work. Before he departed he hoped to see an army of 20,000 young men engaged in it.

—Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, preached at the Metropolitan Tabernacle recently. Mr. Spurgeon gave out the hymns and offered prayer, after which Mr. Muller discoursed for an hour from the words: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course." He mentioned that, besides his orphanage, where there are 2,000 children, who are supported at a cost of £44,000, he had a chapel with 1,000 members, to whom he had been ministering for nearly fifty years. During that period he had remained stationary, but now, at seventy years of age, he felt bound to go to other places and say what great things the Lord had done for him.

—From the speech of Dr. Mullens at the eighty-first annual meeting of the London Missionary Society we learn that the present number of missionaries is 156—not greater than ten years ago, but covering a wider range of work, as many of the mission stations have become self-supporting and are under native laborers. The most recent enterprise of the London society is the New Guinea mission. Ten islands in the Papuan gulf have been occupied, and two stations commenced on the mainland of New Guinea, on the banks of the Kalan river. Two English missionaries and more than 20 native evangelists (from the South Sea Islands) are engaged in founding this mission in a land which for many generations has been the terror of the mercantile world. The receipts of the society for the year were $525,000, of which some $100,000 were raised at the mission stations. The accounts were closed with a small surplus. This seems to have been the case with all the leading British missionary associations, in marked contrast with our American societies, during the past year.

—The German correspondent of the Nonconformist gives an account of the second annual synod of the German Old Catholics just held at Bonn. Privy Counselor von Schulte presented the report on the present state of Old Catholicism in the German empire. In Prussia there are 32 recognized churches, with 6,040 men, representing 18,765 persons, and giving an increase of men for 1874 of 1,458, and in all of 1,727 persons. Places not yet recognized by the bishop are not included in the report. In Baden the number of men in 35 constituted churches is 4,371, the total number of persons being 14,093—so that in the year the number is more than doubled. There are in addition to these a number of places not included because they have not accepted the Old Catholic constitution. There are in all Germany 15,006 men, and in all 47,737 persons, 54 priests, 32 churches, recognized by the State as parishes, nearly 150 societies, etc. The report closed with the warmest thanks to the Protestants, who in all neighborhoods granted the use of their church to the Old Catholics.

Our Young People.

THE COTTAGE DOOR.

Happy little children,
In their cottage low,
Sheltered when the rain falls,
Or the rough winds blow.

Thinking nothing better
Than their bread and milk;
In russet garb as joyous
As in robes of silk.

Little has their mother;
But, though small her store,
She can clothe and feed them,
And she asks no more.

All day working for them
With her love's great might;
Sleeping calmly by them
Through the silent night.

Treasuring not of riches,
Poor content to be,
And the future leaving
To its poverty.

Knowing, if the ravens
Certainly are fed,
They will never hunger
For their daily bread.

MR. EDITOR: We read in the Young People's column, in the ADVOCATE of last week, about the Florence fund. We are working this vacation to make some missionary money, and sister Mary Lu. and I wish to add a dollar to the fund together (fifty cents each) for the education of a boy or girl in China. We hope to have the money ready every year for the six years. Brother Arthur is making some missionary money, too, but he thinks he will not have enough to divide, as we all wish to hand some to our pastor for other missions. Brother Arthur is only five years old, sister is seven and I am ten.

We do not belong to any Sunday school, as we live eight miles from our church, which is at Shreveport—too far to attend; but we take the Sunday school periodicals, and mamma teaches us the lessons at home. We love very much to read Grandpa Goodale's letters, and hope to hear very soon that he has made up the remaining $50.

Your little friend,

ROBERTA F. MOORE.

A Goose Story.

"A goose story?" Didn't I hear somebody say that scornfully, just as I put my pen to this paper?

Well, I am not surprised, for I have heard all the common expressions: "Silly as a goose," "Don't be a goose," and "You little goose." Indeed I may as well confess that I sometimes use such expressions, but of late years I never do so without feeling rather ashamed of myself; and I am now going to tell you how this feeling came about. Not very long ago it was my lot to board for a whole year at a farm-house, and I was an eye-witness to the truth of this little story.

The farmer's wife, having no geese, set some goose-eggs under a hen, but only three were hatched, and soon two of the goslings died, leaving only one. Then, to make matters worse for the poor little fellow, the hen forsook him.

Any boys and girls that live where fowls are kept will know that chickens and goslings don't like to be without companions one whit more than children do; and this small orphan cried so pitifully after his lost friends that the good woman of the house, out of kindness toward him, set some more goose-eggs.

These were hatched when the first was about six weeks old; and he immediately claimed relationship with the young goslings. Strange to say, this second brood was also deserted by the hen-mother within ten days after they saw the light; but they got along very nicely without her, for straightway the older gosling took them under his charge, though not under his wings, for at that time he had none worth mentioning. Some people might have counted it a "silly goose" performance, but to my fancy it was a touching one, when that gosling gander, not yet arrived at the dignity of feathers, would run hissing at any living thing that he suspected of unfriendly intentions toward his nurslings; while the little things ran along behind him or at his side, seeming to think him mother enough for them. He led them down the roadside to a place where a tiny rivulet crossed the road; and he found for them all the bright green spots where the grass was fresh and tender; then at evening he brought them home to the wood shed, where they had been hatched, and which had always been their sleeping-place.

After his feathers were grown, and he was become a handsome, stately fellow, you should have seen him as he came home at nightfall, marching along, with his head erect and his bright eyes keenly looking out on either side; the other three were sure to be close behind, but walking quite carelessly, evidently without any concern on their minds, and leaving both dignity and vigilance to their brave leader.

Their confidence was not misplaced, for when he was fully grown—and indeed all through the following winter it was not exactly safe for any outsider to meddle much with the affairs of that family—he could do more than hiss with that mouth of his, and a slap from his wings once brought him off conqueror in a contest between a bullying, vexatious boy and himself. The boy threatened vengeance dire, but his mother interfered. She said it was a fair fight, and if the gander had the best of it she was glad, as he was only standing up for his rights; he didn't begin the quarrel. However, there was a persistent feud between Johnnie and the gander up to the period when I left the farm-house.

For a time I was a little afraid of the martial bird; but, as I was given to poking around among the poultry, we somehow became very well acquainted and the best of friends.

He would take bits of bread from my fingers as gently as though he had been taught politeness at a boarding school; and he submitted with excellent grace when I passed him by to feed my lame pensioners, of whom I had several about the premises.

Like many another brave and efficient male protector, this feathered biped was very fond of little ones; so much so that when the black hen brought out an early brood of chickens, and in April led them around the garden in search of worms and last year's seeds, the gander found the sprightly little creatures so fascinating that he seemed quite taken up with them, and wandered about in their vicinity, or sat on the ground where he could keep them in view.

At length he was drawn from the chickens by a stronger attraction. One of the geese, after several misfortunes in the way of breaking her eggs and rolling them out of the nest, hatched one gosling. Poor little thing! it was very wee, and more dead than alive when it was rescued from under the trampling feet of its awkward young mother, and placed in a basket of wool to come to its senses. In due time it was lively enough to be put out of doors among the geese; but there is no knowing what would have been the fate of that toddling mite if it had been left entirely to the care of its mother. However, the gander soon discovered it, and then it was a sight to see him stretch his neck, with head almost touching the ground, as he made his observations.

You would really think his low gabble was a fatherly talk or counsel to those ignorant and rather stupid females of his family. Anyway, from that hour they seemed to consider the gosling a kind of joint stock possession among them; and never a family were more preposterously proud of a young one than they of theirs. Such a fuss as there was over it, and it was very funny to see the unconscious impudence of the small green fluffy thing. Instead of following its elders, it went just where and when it pleased, and all the geese went after it.

Before it was a week old it would run to me whenever I appeared, because I fed it, and the gander allowed me to handle it as much as I liked, but woe to anybody else who took such a liberty with his treasure.

I used to fill an old pan with water for the flock to drink, and very soon the pert little tyrant learned how to get into the pan, and there, before their thirsty bills, he would monopolize the dish, making the whole kith and kin wait until it was his pleasure to come out.

I left the neighborhood in August, and the last time I saw that gosling he was a well-grown, white feathered stripling of a bird; but he still ran after me, hoping to get his dainty morsel—a bit of soft bread. The gander was feeding there, and, lifting his head, he looked gravely at me, as if he would say: "Pray, pardon him; he's a fine young fellow; but goslings will be goslings, especially when, as in his case, they haven't had to bear early responsibilities."—Mrs. Olive Stewart, in Work and Play.

In the Revelation we read of seven churches, seven candlesticks, seven stars, seven trumpets, seven plagues, seven thunders, seven vials, seven angels, and a seven-headed monster.

HATS OFF.—Off with your hat, my boy, when you enter the house. Gentlemen never keep their hats on in the presence of ladies, and if you always take yours off when mamma and the girls are by, you will not forget yourself, or be mortified when a guest or stranger happens to be in the parlor. Habit is stronger than anything else, and you will always find that the easiest way to make sure of doing right on all occasions is to get in the habit of doing right. Good manners cannot be put on at a moment's warning.

RABELAIS had written some sensible pieces which the world did not regard at all. "I will write something," said he, "that they shall take notice of." And so he sat down to writing nonsense.

Worldly Amusements.

We do not know what sort of a circus it was. We suppose there was a clown, finely trained horses with women to ride them, and the usual concomitants of immodest spectacles and vulgar nonsense. Fine horses and fine women are well enough in their places, and cheerful amusements for the young people, if of the right sort, are not to be censured. But it must have been an unusual kind of circus which godly people could patronize with a good conscience. A revival of religion is surely needed in any church given to circus and theater-going. This is the best antidote we know of to correct the mania for amusements of doubtful tendency. When members of the church are found running after them, it is clear that they have forsaken the fountain of living waters, and have commenced the very foolish work of hewing out broken cisterns. The good old rule which forbids "the taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus," is obsolete as to them unless their attention is called to it in the way of discipline; and such Scriptures as exhort us to avoid all appearance of evil, and to walk circumspectly toward them which are without, are of none effect. Conscience ought to have the benefit of the doubt, even where there is something to be said on both sides; but our pleasure-loving friends are usually more careful to give the devil his due than to deal righteously with their own souls.

We know some very consistent people who do not join the church, and who make no pretensions to religion, because they are fond of these unchristian diversions, and are unwilling, for the present, to give them up. They have the sense to see that the two cannot go together, and they are unwilling to attempt to unite so dubious a practice with so sacred a profession. It is a pity, of course, that the wiser choice is not made, but better make no profession of discipleship than to betray the Master with a kiss. Until men and women have made up their minds to give up these diversions, they do well to give up all thought of becoming Christians. The sort of religion which they can hold in connection with them will be of little use in the dying hour, while their example is a damage to the cause of Christ. They profess to see no harm in these amusements, and perhaps they do see none. This is the most serious fact in their case. Others do see much harm in them, and the general voice of the church condemns them. They have eyes, but they see not, and their heart has become gross. It is the lack of spirituality in them that accounts for the imperfect and distorted vision. Probably they never will see until they are converted, or until they know of the wreck of character in themselves or others to which these indulgencies lead.

It is claimed that people must have recreation, and that dancing, theaters, circuses, and the like, are about all that are available. It is also claimed that people must have money, and a great many other things which they must do without, unless they gain them honestly and lawfully. If there are no pleasures which do not tend to dissipation and irreligion, then there are none for Christ's followers. Good men have surrendered everything for their religion. They have been burnt at the stake rather than renounce their faith. To give up a certain class of worldly amusements for Christ's sake is a very small sacrifice. If we stick at this the elements of a Christian soldier are not in us, and our religion is a very shallow and contemptible thing. The Master says: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Wherein do these pleasure-seekers propose to locate their self-denial, to take up their cross, or to follow Christ? If there is any sacrifice in renouncing this form of worldliness, here is the occasion for them to make it. To those who truly love God, and are happy in his favor, there is no sacrifice at all in abstaining from these pernicious amusements; but if it assumes this character to any, he has come to a point where the issue should be made between duty and conscience, and a spirit of frivolity and selfishness.

The line between the true spiritual church and the world is in nothing drawn more distinctly than in the matter of amusements. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." The difference between walking after the flesh and after the Spirit is nowhere more clear than in our recreations. The test of spirituality and devotedness to Christ is stronger here than in the more serious pursuits of life. The kingdom is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. With this kingdom set up in the heart, is it conceivable that men will seek for pleasure in the coarse jests of a clown, or find delight and entertainment in the popular representations of the modern stage? A sensuous nature, with no spiritual peace and joy, may find them agreeable and fascinating, but it is absurd to suppose that he who walks with God and enjoys communion with his Maker should even tolerate them.

We might reason with worldly people against these things as tending to bad morals, to corrupt our youth and to enervate the nation, but to argue with religious people would be time thrown away. If they are for Christ they know that these amusements are wrong. If they contend for them, and patronize them at the same time that they profess godliness, there is a fatal defect in their religion which can only be cured by a sound conversion. It is a common evil that a certain class of church members are ever going astray in this direction. It is well to warn and to enforce discipline, but they will never be likely to mend until they are born of the Spirit, or reclaimed from their backslidings by the renewal of their spiritual life.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

Last week we gave some account of this meeting up to Monday evening, July 26. The meeting closed with an experience meeting on Friday morning, July 30, thus ending on the tenth day. There were mourners at the altar at the last sermon and prayer meeting on Thursday night. There were in all seventy-five conversions, perhaps more, and a number of backsliders were reclaimed. Among those converted were several gray-haired men. As has been the case heretofore, the greater work was in the manifestations of power and grace among believers. The experience meetings were very rich indeed in the exhibition of the work of the Holy Spirit in believing hearts. Many of the experiences related were remarkably instructive. The time devoted to this exercise was most precious—made up of hours of melting tenderness and most gracious manifestations of the divine presence.

The congregations continued large until the close—orderly and serious throughout. The meeting brought together many people from widely-separated sections of the Southwest—Selma, Montgomery, Mobile, Florida, New Orleans, Alexandria, Baton Rouge, and the country on the line of the Mobile and New Orleans railroad. Of the thousands who came and went very few failed to receive special blessings, or strong and, we trust, lasting convictions. Next year, we doubt not, there will be many additional tents and a larger concourse.

The Seashore camp ground becomes better known from year to year; it has grown steadily from the first, and this fourth meeting has been the best of all in attendance and in results. The singing was a great improvement on last year. Thirty-five sermons were preached, the most of them of superior excellence and power—all of them good. Dr. Walker conducted the services with judgment, and was in labors abundant. Bishop Keener tented, as usual, and in preaching, exhortation, song, prayer and altar work was indefatigable. The venerable J. G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, was present and preached, besides giving an account of his long and edifying experience. Beyond this our personal mention cannot well go except to give the names of ministers in attendance. Their sermons and labors are recorded on high.

The following is a tolerably accurate list of the preachers: Bishop J. C. Keener, D. D., Edward Wadsworth, D. D., J. B. Wilker, D. D., Robert Babington, T. W. Dyer, Christian Keener, C. B. Galloway, W. H. Leith, T. S. West, James Morrow, R. S. Trippett, J. Lane Borden, Samuel H. Schroeder, J. D. Harper, H. B. Urquhart, John T. Sawyer, W. L. Peebles, C. G. Andrews, D. D., J. G. Jones, B. Wynne, J. B. A. Ahrens, John Mathews, J. W. DuBose, Thomas Mullett, J. W. Rush, E. M. Bounds, H. Urquhart, Jr., B. Jones, John Keener, W. D. Dominick, William Shapard, D. D., C. F. Gillaspie, Col. Crooks, G. F. Vickers, David Merchant, J. E. Smith, J. Nicholson, Mr. Lamart, James O. Andrew, G. F. Thompson, R. J. Harp, Linus Parker, W. M. Jordan, C. W. Calhoun, W. H. Watkins, D. D., J. E. Foust, Joseph James, Allen S. Andrews, D. D., James S. White, Josiah Barker, S. H. Cox, D. D., Frank Peterson.

Such a strong force of preachers made the occasion almost equal to an Annual Conference in ministerial fellowship and gifts, and contributed greatly to the general interest. The good effects will also be felt in the increased zeal and power of their ministry when they return to their charges. We count it a great privilege to have met so many of these devoted men of God, and to have enjoyed their conversation and preaching. They will always be welcome to the Seashore camp meetings.

Much credit is due to the trustees for the arrangements made by them, and for the good order maintained. During the meeting their cares and labors were very onerous. Of the members of the board, William H. Foster, William Otis, J. H. Keller, R. S. Rickey, B. O. L. Rayno and G. W. W. Goodwyn were specially active and laborious in business affairs. Their duties prevented them from attending many of the religious services, but they all got a blessing somehow. The Lord will reward them still more in that day.

Meeting of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—The meeting, as called, took place at the Seashore camp ground last week. Rev. E. Wadsworth, D. D., and Rev. J. W. Rush, of the Alabama Conference, Rev. J. G. Jones and Rev. W. H. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. John Mathews and Rev. L. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, were present. The publisher presented a detailed statement of the condition and management of the paper. The interests of the paper were carefully considered, and the course of the publisher approved. The committee, by resolution, expressed their gratification at the exhibit of the business management, and took the necessary steps to extend the present contract at its expiration in December, 1876. Bro. Rush was appointed to prepare an address to the patrons of the paper, embodying the views of the committee, to be published in the columns of the Advocate. The meeting was harmonious and most agreeable, and we hope will contribute to strengthen and extend the influence of the paper.

District.

Mr. Editor: We "rejoice with trembling." There are some things which fill our hearts with pleasure. There are others which give us deep pain. Some of our churches "eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart." In these churches piety is deepening, prayers are becoming more earnest, and faith is reaching up after higher joys and experiences. Some of our churches are sitting in the dust. They have been "brought down, and speak out of the ground." Some have received shocks from which they will not recover for years. Some have become entangled in the meshes of the law. Judgments from the civil courts have been obtained against two churches and one parsonage. The support of the ministers in this district is no support at all. One circuit "took time by the forelock" and dismissed its preacher early in the year. They would not even take the "gospel on tick." Some of the charges are groaning and puffing and sweating and blowing about the matter; but, alas! blows and sweats and puffs and groans are not the things needed in a preacher's larder. I cannot yet report a clear case of ministerial starvation, but the people everywhere are wondering how the preachers "do get along!" We have had a very abundant crop of vegetables, which is, I suppose, "the saving clause" so far. Our people are, indeed, poorer than ever. We have boasted of our poverty so long that the thing has actually come in sight, and, like Job, we can say: "The thing that I greatly feared has come upon me." But there is hope for the future. The prospects for a large harvest of corn and cotton are very flattering. But the irrepressible worm is on hand, and may yet do much mischief.

We have no special revival news to chronicle. Indeed the time has not arrived for revivals. We have limited the workings of the Holy Spirit to a certain season of the year, and of course do not expect him to work until that season comes. Although the preachers have had hard times, and suffered much in mind and body, yet their lives and labors are a beautiful exposition of the words of Isaiah: "For Zion's sake will not I hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."

P. E.

Mrs. Lambuth.

Our good friend and devoted missionary was called from Emory and Henry College, Va.—where she had come to attend the commencement at which her son graduated—to the sick-bed of her mother, whom she had not seen for more than ten years. Since that time she has been a watcher at the bedside of the patient sufferer. To-day a letter from Mrs. Lambuth, bearing date July 17, says: "One week ago yesterday the children's grandma was buried, or at least her body was, while the spirit left its earthly house the day before, just as we were coming into sunlight. A happy release from pain, and we feel confident that the gates of heaven opened for our loved one, and that angels took her into the realms of bliss on high."

We rejoice that God, in his providence, gave to Sister Lambuth the sad privilege of watching the last hours of the now sainted mother, and blend our sympathy with her in the happy release of the sufferer.

In the same letter Sister Lambuth mentions an invitation from Mrs. Hays, president of the "Woman's Bible Mission of Baltimore," to visit that city, which she proposes to do at an early day. We, too, have had a similar invitation, and should greatly rejoice to be present. Mrs. Hays was the wife of the presiding elder of the Richmond district, Virginia Conference, at the time of the farewell meeting in Richmond, from which Dr. Jenkins, on his return trip, Brother and Sister Belton, Brother and Sister Lambuth, the writer and his now sainted wife, sailed for China, more than twenty years ago. Mrs. Hays, in her kind letter of invitation, beautifully and touchingly alludes to the fact that if she, Sister Lambuth and myself could meet her, we then should make up the list of the survivors, Bro. Lambuth excepted, of the party who, under her conduct, made a most delightful visit to the house of that prince in Israel, D'Arcy Paul, late of Petersburg, Va. We cannot command the time to go—double duty ties us with a short cable. To do the work of a presiding elder and missionary secretary does not give us time for even one trip, however we might enjoy it.

During the interval between her visit to Baltimore and the Kentucky Conference, September 15, we hope Mrs. Lambuth will find a call for all her time in visiting Sunday schools and giving them information about the Chinese and our missionary work there. During her stay in Nashville quite a number of our people found both their minds enlightened and their hearts quickened by her reports fresh from the field. A Sunday school gathering might be held on successive evenings in the week at intermediate points in the Baltimore, Virginia and Louisville Conferences. Pastors or Sunday school superintendents, who would be glad to have this profit and entertainment for their schools, will please write to me at once here, or to Mrs. M. J. Lambuth, care of Mrs. Julianna Hays, Baltimore, Md. Mrs. Lambuth has a number of Chinese curiosities with her, which will greatly interest both children and intelligent adults. Her visits would be especially opportune for the formation of Sunday School and Woman's Missionary Societies, and we hope our Christian women will leave no effort unused to get a visit, and the valuable information she brings, from our devoted missionary. After the Kentucky Conference we hope to have Mrs. Lambuth again with us in Tennessee. We have had the pleasure of superintending for some years the education of her eldest son, who this fall will enter the Biblical Department of the Vanderbilt University, and there prepare himself fully to join his father as a missionary in China, at the end of two years. From Tennessee Mrs. Lambuth will go to Missouri, leaving with us her only daughter to be recruited in health, and to complete her education. We take the sacred charge with a sense of its responsibility, and pleasure that it is our privilege. After a short time in Missouri, where she has invitations from several prominent ministers, and where we hope she will largely increase her acquaintance with the women of the church, she will again start for China. She will be accompanied on her return by the Rev. A. P. Parker, of the Missouri Conference, who, after great care, has been selected by Bishop McTyeire to re-enforce our mission in China. From Bro. Parker's letters to us, and the representations of those who know him best, we have high hopes of his success in the field to which we believe God has called him.

D. C. Kelley.

Fools worship mules that carry gold.

Key West, Fla.

Much solicitude, says the Southern Christian Advocate of July 21, has doubtless been felt by many readers of the Advocate for this community, and especially for our preachers and their families located there, since the announcement of the prevalence of yellow fever in Key West. We give below the substance of two letters from Bro. C. A. Fulwood, which, though written at intervals, reached us by the same mail. We rejoice that our brethren and their families still live, and we feel sure that our readers will join us in the prayer that they may survive the scourge, and be spared to the church and their friends. Bro. Fulwood says, in a private note of the third instant: "Bro. M. Johnson and wife arrived this morning from New York. Sister Johnson was a Miss Lovejoy, of Oxford, and has only been residing here since January. Her husband will charter a boat and proceed at once to Manatee. You may mention this, so that her friends may be relieved from needless anxiety. She is in perfect health." These are the letters:

Bro. Kennedy: This is the first time I have attempted to write since my sickness. To-night two weeks ago my life was despaired of. Through God's great mercy and the devoted kindness of friends I am nursed back to life from the grave's mouth. I am trying to render such service as my enfeebled condition will allow.

Dr. Murray is down with fever, but is now convalescing, and it is hoped will be able to resume practice in the course of two or three weeks. His wife continues tolerably well, but is worn out by watching and mental anxiety.

Bro. Johnson, pastor of Sparks' chapel, and wife both have been quite ill; now up; but theirs is a sad house to-night. Sister Goodlit, mother-in-law of Bro. Johnson, died this evening. The city is in a state of panic. The fever smites the natives as well as others. What the end is to be none are able to forecast. We are so isolated—cut off—and now closely quarantined. Many who would leave find no means of getting away. As for Bro. Johnson and myself, we will remain in any event, and live and labor if God will, or even die at the post of duty if Providence so order. Will you ask the church to remember us in prayer? Should I fall here, the brethren will "remember the widow's son." Yours in Christ,

Chas. A. Fulwood.

Key West, June 27, 1875.

P. S.—June 28.—Bro. Johnson's little daughter is ill this morning with fever.

Bro. Kennedy: I write again, but can make no calculation as to when you will receive it. The mail that left here for Cedar Keys last Monday a week ago was not allowed to be landed, and was brought back here this morning. Not to allow us the privilege of sending out our mails is unreasonable and inhuman.

No material change in the health of the city. For the last few days we have had rain, accompanied with much electricity, and it is hoped that there will soon be a decrease of sickness. Last Sunday was a sad day to my church and Sabbath school. Two of our best and most promising young members were buried from the church, attended by a weeping multitude.

I am in improving health, and hope soon to be able to do full duty. Bro. Johnson is beginning to get round among his people. My immediate family continues in usual health. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

C. A. Fulwood.

Key West, July 6, 1875.

Bishop Kavanaugh.—This venerable and beloved Bishop of our church, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of July 24, has been sojourning for a few days in Baltimore. He preached on Sabbath morning and night last at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church South, to large and attentive audiences. Both discourses were marked by the earnestness, unction and thrilling eloquence that characterize all the pulpit efforts of this distinguished divine. It is cause for the grateful recognition of providential favor that our good Bishop retains to such a wonderful degree both his bodily and mental vigor. Although in his seventy-fourth year, he has the vim and energy of a man of thirty. Like all our chief pastors, he is abundant in labors, and we rejoice that he gives promise of useful service to the church for many years to come.

Centenary Church, in this city, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of July 22, was rededicated on last Sabbath. It has been remodeled at a cost of over $20,000. A full account of improvements will be given next week.

Dr. Edwards preached in the morning on "Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting."—Isaiah 1, 13.

Some fourteen hundred dollars were raised after the sermon. At night the sum was increased to the amount needed—$2,000. Dr. Granbery and Bro. Bledsoe made addresses.

Elizabeth A. Shattuck, wife of Judge D. O. Shattuck, says the Pacific Methodist, died at Sonoma, on the morning of July 9, 1875. The death of this venerable and beloved mother in Israel was not unexpected, as her failing health had admonished her friends for some time past that she was nearing the end of her pilgrimage. Her life was faithful; her end was peace. In her domestic relations she was all that a Christian woman could be. As wife, mother, neighbor, friend, she was exemplary and devoted. As a Christian her piety was earnest though unostentatious, cheerful without lightness, conscientious without austerity.

Books and Periodicals.

Popular Resorts, and How to Reach Them. By John B. Bachelder. Boston: John B. Bachelder, publisher, 1875.

This is a gazetteer of pleasure travel in the United States. It gives clearly the information required by the tourist, and forms a beautiful table-book, valuable either as a souvenir of travel or a descriptive work on popular localities. There are 150 wood-cuts by the best engravers. Type and binding excellent. To travelers and pleasure-seekers the work will be exceedingly useful, while to those who stay at home it will be an entertaining and instructive volume. A large and well-executed railway map of the United States and Canada is conveniently folded and inserted in the book.

Littell's Living Age.—The numbers of the Living Age for July 10 and 17 contain William Blake, from the Cornhill Magazine; an installment of the Convent of San Marco, from MacMillan; parts 1 and 2 of "The Dilemma," from Blackwood; an installment of German Home Life, Sea Studies, by J. A. Froude, and Peasant Life in North Italy, from Fraser; Thomas Love Peacock, from the New Quarterly Review; A Trip into the Interior of Formosa, a Geographical Day Dream, and Sir John Lubbock on Bees and Ants, from the Spectator; with the conclusion of Miss Angel, by Miss Thackeray, an installment of Fated to be Free, by Jean Ingelow, and the usual choice poetry and miscellany. A new volume began July 1. With 52 numbers, of 64 large pages each (aggregating over 3,000 pages a year,) the subscription price ($8) is low; or, still better, for $10.50 any one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies is sent with the Living Age for a year, both postpaid. Littell & Gay, Boston, publishers.

Scribner's Monthly for August has the following table of contents: A Farmer's Vacation; A Middy in Manila, illustrated; The Stone Period of the Antilles, illustrated; A Mussel Shell, poem; The Story of Seven Oaks, illustrated; Compensation, poem; A Word of Encouragement for Timid Linguists; Education and Free Thought; Ice, illustrated; The Mysterious Island; Unsaid, poem; Along the Seine, illustrated; How to Treat the Indians; An Eaglewood Mystery; To Hope, poem; Madame Delicieuse; The Awakening, poem; Topics of the Time; The Old Cabinet; Home and Society; Culture and Progress; The World's Work; Bric-a-Brac.

The Galaxy for August has the following table of contents: Dear Lady Disdain, chapters 19, 20 and 21; Whence? Zealot and Student; A London June; The Moon and the Hare; Leaves from the Life of an Old German Professor; My Beloved, a sonnet; Alfieri and the Countess of Albany; Benvolio; Sonnet—"A Perfect Woman, Nobly Planned;" Mohammed the Iconoclast; Leah, a Woman of Fashion; Drift-Wood; Scientific Miscellany; Current Literature; Nebulæ.

The Methodist Quarterly Review for July, 1875, is to hand. Contents: The Religious Nature of Savages, The Millennium and the Advent, Thomas A. Morris, Life and Literature in the Fatherland, Upham on the Star of the Nativity, The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer Tolnette. The editorial department is, as usual, able and voluminous, containing: Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Foreign Literary Intelligence, Quarterly Book-Table.

St. Nicholas for August is splendidly illustrated. It has: The Blue-Sick Doll, The Cruise of the Crusoe, Dick's Spiritual Help, Jingle, Umbrellas, The Sea-Weed Album, The Young Surveyor, A Gunpowder Plot, Jack in the Pulpit, and other articles. Scribner & Co., publishers, New York. Price, $3 a year.

Lippincott's Magazine for August has: Two Weeks in the Carlist Country, Quaint Craft, Scenes in the Wood, The Modern Constitutions of France, Frau Sommers' Pleasure Trip, A Daimio's Life, Mains de Biran, An Artist's Love, and other articles. The first are illustrated.

Illness of Father Boehm.—The New York Christian Advocate says: "This venerable centenarian has been quite ill for several days past. Since his sermon in the John Street church—a sermon which we have reason to believe was his last—he was prostrated suddenly with erysipelas, and has been blind for several days. His mind, however, is clear as ever, and his patience and good cheer do not fail. As soon as he is able to be removed his friends purpose to take him into the country, in order that he may enjoy complete rest."

The Pittsburg Advocate learns by a note from David Sankey, Esq., of Newcastle, Pa., that his son, Ira D. Sankey, with his family and friends, will sail for America on the Spain, August 4. They were to cease their public labors in London on Sunday, July 11.

THE London papers publish the whole text of the Archbishop of Canterbury's letter upon the Moody and Sankey movement, and, taken as a whole, the letter is a frank and manly one. The archbishop takes "the deepest interest in the movement," and rejoices "that the present movement is conducted on so great a scale and with such apparent success." He fears that the after-meetings held for consultation may be a source of some evil, the result of imprudent advice. This is no more than might be expected from the "primate of all England," and does not detract from the hearty, not to say generous, acknowledgment which he makes of Mr. Moody's services. The archbishop's letter concludes as follows:

"The Lord Jesus himself told St. John not to forbid one who was casting out devils in his name, though he followed not with the regularly appointed company of the apostles; saying: 'He that is not against us is for us.' It is, according to my judgment, in this spirit that we ministers of the Church of England are right to regard this missionary work. It is our part to trust and fervently to pray that God may guide all who speak in his name, that many hitherto careless or directly opposing may have their hearts opened to the influence of the gospel of Christ and their lives regulated by his law."

THE paper manufacturers report the rather peculiar fact that the rags received at the mills last winter were noticeably more ragged and threadbare than usual, which is supposed to be the result of the hard times—everybody wearing out old clothes.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1871—From Canton, Miss	2 00
June 11, 1875—From Selma, Ala	5 00
Nov. 21, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Isney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 5, 187—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE low terms offered by Bethel Academy, in the advertisement to-day, must excite surprise, especially when the character of the institution is taken into consideration. We observe that it is indorsed by the highest educational authorities of Virginia. The following extracts are from some of the testimonials in its catalogue:

"I most heartily commend Bethel Academy to the favor and patronage of the public."—William E. Peters, Prof. Latin, Univ. of Virginia.

"I would be willing to confide my own son to Mr. Smith's care, and hence I recommend the school to other parents."—F. H. Smith, Prof. Nat. Phil., Univ. of Virginia.

"I feel warranted from experience in recommending it."—John B. Minor, Prof. Law, Univ. of Virginia.

"One of the best institutions of its class in the State."—H. H. Harris, Prof. Greek, Richmond College.

AMONG our advertisements will be found that of Gannett Institute, which holds a foremost rank among the private schools of Boston and Vicinity. In its broad range of studies, its large and efficient corps of teachers, its various courses of lectures upon history, literature, science and art, this institution offers such opportunities for thorough and complete instruction as can rarely be found in any other devoted exclusively to the education of young ladies.

CLEVELAND, COLUMBUS, CINCINNATI AND INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD.—In going to the great lakes the above road should be chosen by tourists from Cincinnati or St. Louis to Cleveland. This line, passing through the most populous portions of Indiana and Ohio, and connecting with all the important roads through those sections, offers inducements which cannot fail to attract travelers. Steamers leave Cleveland daily for the Canada shore.

PHONOGRAPHY.—It is not necessary to leave home and business, and incur the great expense of living in the city, to acquire a knowledge of phonography. One can pursue the study at home, during leisure time—evenings especially. Lessons are given by mail, by writing full explanations of principles. For information in regard to this science we refer our readers to the card of Brown's College of Phonography, which will be seen elsewhere in to-day's paper.

MISSOURI, KANSAS AND TEXAS TANK LINE COMPANY.—We have among our new advertisements to-day the card of the above firm, Mr. A. A. Baily is the general manager. His office is at Cleveland, O. Branch offices are located in Hannibal, Mo., Fort Scott, Kan., Dallas, Texas, and at other points. They are large dealers in burning and lubricating oils. For particulars see their advertisement.

BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD.—Those traveling through the North this summer will consult their own comfort and pleasure by taking a trip over the above railroad. The ride from Boston to Portland in the superb coaches on this line is simply delightful. We advise our friends to try this route, and are assured they will not regret it.

NEW YORK COACH MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—We direct special attention to the advertisement of this firm, which will be found in to-day's paper. Any one wanting a good carriage or buggy, on reasonable terms, is advised to communicate with them before purchasing elsewhere.

WE CALL the attention of our readers to the advertisement headed "Portland Cement." Those who purpose building or repairing would consult their own interests by writing to S. L. Merchant & Co., 76 South street, New York, for their treatise on cement.

CARRIAGES.—J. Lowman & Son, Cleveland, O., manufacture carriages of every description. They make a specialty of the Side Spar Wagon. Dealers and our readers generally would do well to note their advertisement, which will be found on this page.

THE Virginia Female Institute, Staunton, Va., is advertised in to-day's paper. Those having daughters to educate would do well to examine a catalogue of this school before finally deciding. For particulars see the advertisement.

AUGUSTA FEMALE INSTITUTE.—We call attention to the advertisement in another column headed as above. This institution is located in Staunton, Va., and is under the control of able educators.

THE advertisement of Chambers Sterling Pianos will be found on this page. Circulars and price lists will be sent to any one on application.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Preserving Cut Flowers.

In an article on this subject in the Garden, of London, we find the following, which may be new to many of our readers: "Another point connected with the duration of flowers in a cut state deserves more attention than it has hitherto received, and that is prevention of the flowers from becoming fertilized, as they seldom last long—even when left on the plants—after that takes place; besides, the pollen of some flowers, more especially that of lilies, has a bad odor, and soils the purity of the petals when shed on them. Cultivators are aware of this fact, and either remove the anthers or stigma with a sharp-pointed pair of scissors, or give them a dextrous touch with a gum brush, so as to prevent the escape of the pollen. Flowers so treated last much longer than those allowed to take their chance in the usual way, for it is a fact that many flowers droop as soon as the pollen is shed or the stigma fertilized. This is the case with phalænopsids and other orchids which, under ordinary circumstances, last fresh for fully a month or six weeks; but as soon as a flower is fertilized—either intentionally, by insect agency or by accident—the petals wither and collapse, and the flower quickly fades. Gumming is also resorted to by bouquet-makers in the case of azaleas, zonal and fancy pelargoniums, rhododendrons and other flowers of a fragile character. The process is extremely simple—a drop of gum or prepared mucilage is allowed to fall down into the center of each flower, and after several are thus operated on they are placed in rows to dry. The gum sets in a mass at the base of the petals, and firmly unites them to the base of the stigma, so that the flowers last much longer than they otherwise would do, and the danger of the petals falling at an unlucky moment and leaving an ugly hole in the bouquet, wreath, vase or other arrangement is to a great extent obviated."

Remedy for Smut in Wheat.—A farmer in Ireland, whose wheat was much affected by smut, succeeded in remedying this evil by adopting a simple preventive which he learned had been practiced successfully in Flanders for many years. The remedy is a steep composed of sixty pounds of quick lime and thirty pounds of salt made into a solution sufficient to cover six hundred pounds of wheat.

In order to test this remedy he procured the worst smutted wheat he could find, and after steeping for different periods he sowed one hundred and twelve pounds, divided into four equal parts, on equal portions of land:

No. 1, merely steeped so as to cleanse it.

No. 2, steeped in the solution twelve hours.

No. 3, steeped twenty-four hours.

No. 4, steeped forty-eight hours.

At reaping-time No. 1 was dreadfully black. No. 2 had a good deal of black in it. No. 3 none at all. Nos. 3 and 4 swelled very much, but did not burst. No. 2 swelled also, but not so much. Seeing that No. 3, which was steeped for twenty-four hours, succeeded as well as No. 4, he has practiced steeping for twenty-four hours, and has continued to do so with perfect success for thirty-two years. He has not had the slightest appearance of smut in his wheat since he commenced using this remedy. After taking the wheat out of the steep he lets it lie in a heap to drain. In broken weather he has kept it after being steeped for ten days, turning it every day, without any bad results.—Southern Cultivator.

Pole Beans Without Poles.—J. B. Root, of Rockford, Ill., tells, in his Garden Manual, how he succeeded last year in raising Lima beans without poles. One fifth of an acre was planted in hills, six seeds to each, eyes down, and when the runners were three feet high if straightened up, the tips were nipped off, thus inducing prompt development of all blossoms, and a set of side shoots which clung to each other and formed a sort of cone. No more pinching in was practiced for fear of too late a growth. The result was that the plants seemed content with a less stature, and a large proportion of the settings matured. The crop was fully one-half greater than ever before, and more than a half greater than that on poles the same season. Hereafter he will confine himself to this method, with the difference that a lath, set deep, will be used for each hill. This will furnish something for the cone to cling to in a wind, and the top of the lath will be a good point at which to nip the vine. It is added that if the crop is raised for ripe beans there should be several pickings, as some of the pods touch the ground and in a wet time the beans become stained. While others are advised, on the strength of this experience, to try the plan, it is "recommended that with this, as with all new things, to 'hasten slowly,' and never risk an entire crop on an experiment."

The best way we have found to preserve the valuable qualities of clover hay outside of a barn is to put it in a rick as long as may be desired, and built as high as convenient. The width of the stack may be determined by placing two planks upon the ground, with the ends together, and at such an angle as you think the roof over the stack should be, and measuring across the base of the angle formed by the planks, leaving something for projection of the eaves.

The hay must be piled up in the center, sloping up from each side, and built out well at the ends, to form full gables. Place a scantling along the ridge, spliced, if too short, and supported at the ends by sharpened stakes rammed into the hay, which forms the apex of the roof, with another support two-thirds of the way down each side, of similar pieces, and it is ready for the roof.

The first side should be placed even with the scantling on the ridge, and the other side higher up, to lap over it. In this way the roof settles with the hay, and gives no opportunity for the wind to blow the rain under, or to lift the roof off.—Western Rural.

To Prevent Cows Kicking.—A strap buttoned snugly but not tight around a cow's belly, just forward of the udder, is said to be absolutely effectual. When the cow kicks the skin is so drawn under the strap as to cause great pain, and she learns after one or two efforts that it will not do.

A strange milker caused a favorite cow of ours to kick violently. Her feet were tied together with a small rope. It was first passed around one leg and a "half hitch" taken, then both ends were twisted together about three turns, a half hitch again made and drawn up to about a foot at first; the both ends were passed around the other leg and tied with a square knot, one end being bowed so that it could be quickly untied. A cow so treated will probably soon try to kick, and, feeling the rope, will kick, as well as she can, frantically for awhile, perhaps even throw herself down, but she can hardly hurt herself if some one is near, and she soon gives up and allows herself to be milked quietly so long as the rope is on.—Moore's Rural.

Budding Pecans Upon the Hickory.—A writer to the American Agriculturist from Florida relates the following as his experience on the subject:

"About a year ago I budded a pecan into a vigorous hickory sprout of the same season's growth. The bud remained dormant until the following spring, when the sprout was cut back to the bud. A shoot grew from the bud last summer, which measured nearly ten feet. This shoot has also thrown out seven laterals, measuring from two to four feet each. Last winter I cut down a number of my hickories, some of them measuring nearly a foot through, and this summer have budded the sprouts from them with the pecan. I use annular budding—i. e., a ring of bark with a bud upon it, put in place of a similar ring removed from the stock. It is very seldom a bud fails to take, and the few failures I had were occasioned by a small grub, which works between the bud and the stock, which can be prevented by the application of grafting-wax."

Value of Ashes.—The Scientific American says: "The point to which we now call attention is that which our farmers and fruit-growers have ignored, or rather have been ignorant of—the importance of wood ashes as a vegetable stimulant, and as the leading constituent of plants. Even coal ashes, now thrown away as useless, have been shown by both experiment and analysis to possess a fair share of alkaline value. We will relate only one experiment: Some twenty-five years ago we treated an old hollow pippin apple-tree as follows: The hollow, to the height of eight feet, was filled and rammed with a compost of wood ashes, garden mold, and a little waste lime (carbonate.) The filling was securely fastened in by boards. The next year the crop of sound fruit was sixteen bushels from an old shell of a tree that had borne nothing of any account for some time, and for seventeen years after filling the old pippin-tree continued to flourish and bear well."

Brine for Preserving Butter. The Duchess Farmer says: "To three gallons of brine, strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of nice white sugar and one tablespoonful of saltpeter. Boil the brine, and when it is cold strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each roll separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down, and pour over the brine until all is submerged. This will keep really good butter perfectly fresh for a whole year. Be careful not to put any lee upon butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to the depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested."

For Bloat or Huven in Cattle. A couple of handfuls of soot, well stirred up in a bottle of water, and turned down the animal's throat, relieved one of my oxen, a few days ago, in a very short time; and, being followed in about an hour by a dose of Epsom salts, opened the bowels, and he has worked as usual ever since. I have repeatedly seen both oxen and cows cured by taking about a pound or two of fresh butter or lard, wrapping it in thin paper, and placing it down the animal's throat as far as possible, so that it had to be swallowed. The animal can hardly be considered safe till the bowels are opened. In the west of England a tube for relieving choked or blown cattle was formerly manufactured, but it required so much care and skill in applying it that I do not believe that it was ever extensively used.

The Grape Insect.—A Cure.—Apart from flooding vines, a new means of killing the Phylloxera is to bore three holes, two feet deep, by means of a dibble and a mallet, around the root of the vine, pour into each hole one and-a half ounces carburet of sulphur, called also sulphuret of carbon and alcohol of sulphur; cover in the hole, but do not water; the liquid evaporates rapidly, and its terrible fetid smell and acid, burning taste destroy in a week every bug in its vicinity.

Great works are performed not by strength, but by perseverance.—Johnson.

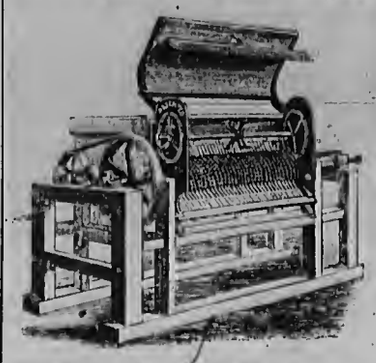
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



This Gin has been in use for the past two seasons, and some great improvements added. It obviates all [illegible] in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Will begin its Twenty-sixth annual session SEPTEMBER 20, 1875. Rev. Wm. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three teachers and officers.
Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher. Music by seven professors and teachers.
This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Those who come here from the South with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases are entirely restored.
Buildings elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed, and none made without express instructions from parents. Strict economy practiced to keep all expenses of pupils within the lowest possible amount.

Scientific.

—Bishop Williams, of Canton, has forwarded to the Jardin d'Acclimation, at Brussels, a remarkable China plant, the first specimen of its kind received in Europe. This plant changes its color three times a day, and is appropriately named Habiscus mutabilis.

—Australia has recently disclosed a new treasure to the geologist and miner. This is white coal. It consists of felted vegetable fibers, like peat, which contain, interspersed between them, fine grains of sand. This white coal covers large tracts, requires no mining, and is used in large quantities as fuel. It is easily combustible, and burns with a bright flame.

—The climate of Minnesota has been recommended as very favorable to consumptives, on the ground that the air of that region is exceptionally dry. But from the Monthly Weather Review of the Signal Office for November last it appears that Minnesota shows the greatest relative humidity of all the regions there named. Thus the relative humidity for New England was .69, middle Atlantic States .66, lake region .69, Minnesota .77.

—Dr. Schloser, of Holland, has found that his own countrymen are the largest consumers of coffee in the world, and next to them the Belgians. In England the annual consumption of coffee by each person is one and one-eighth pounds; in France, two and one-half; in Germany, four; in Denmark, five and one-half; in Switzerland, six; in the United States, seven; in Belgium, eight and one-half; in Holland, ten and one-half. It is to be considered, however, that the English are notoriously a tea-drinking people, preferring it to coffee, not only for the evening meal, but for breakfast as well.

—According to Nature, the Bulletin of the French Geographical Society for December contains an exceedingly interesting and carefully compiled paper by M. H. Duveyrier, entitled L'Afrique Nécrologique. This is a list of all the African explorers, from 1800 to 1874, who have met their death while doing their work, either from disease caught in the country, or by murder or other causes; a very large proportion have died from "intermittent fever." The list includes not only those whose object was purely geographical discovery, but also those whose researches were connected with geology, meteorology, botany, zoology, ethnography, archæology or languages. It is a long one, numbering about one hundred and fifty; and M. Duveyrier in each case gives a brief account of the explorer, and of the work which he accomplished; a large proportion of these martyrs to science are English. Accompanying the paper is an ingeniously-constructed map, showing the place at which each traveler met his death.

—Dr. J. G. Richardson makes an interesting suggestion as to the origin and nature of the so-called "pigment scales or flakes" of the blood. He says: "I call attention to an egregious error, by which several microscopists of acknowledged ability have been ensnared—namely, a belief in the importance of the 'pigment cells' or 'scales' described by Frerichs, of Berlin, as occurring in the blood; of similar bodies found by Drs. Meigs and Pepper, of this city, under like circumstances; and of the pigmentary particles or cellules figured by Dr. William Roberts, of Manchester, England—all of which I assert to be simply and solely accumulations of dirt (especially the remains of red blood corpuscles) in the little excavations or slides in ordinary use." Dr. Roberts observes: "I have been in the habit of observing these objects for many years, and have regarded them as derivatives of hæmatine; but how they come to assume their peculiar forms I am at a loss to conjecture." Dr. Richardson adds to this: "With him, I believe them to be derivatives of hæmatin, but only by the rubbing process detailed above; and I trust that my 'conjecture' how these hæmatine flakes 'come to assume their peculiar forms' may be satisfactory."

—For a year or so past the friends of the free colony in Liberia have been delighted with samples of coffee exhibited to them by E. S. Morris, who has taken an active interest in all that tends to further the interest of this far-away offshoot of our great republic. The coffee grains were not only much larger than those commonly seen in our market, but the flavor of the prepared article much superior. The article was exhibited chiefly to show how favorable the soil and climate of that part of the world were for the production of coffee, and to encourage the friends of the African to persevere in their efforts for his benefit in these distant though his aboriginal lands. It now appears that this coffee is a new species, and has been named by the European botanists Caffea Liberica. So much interest is attached to it that fear is expressed that it will drive the old kind out of the market when it becomes plentiful, and quiet but earnest efforts have been made to introduce the variety to the British possessions in India. These have proved successful, and it is a matter of rejoicing with the East Indian government that a shipment of young plants reached their country in such excellent condition that many cuttings have been made, and they will soon be abundant. The ordinary coffee is found to be the prey of many enemies in that country—both among parasitic fungi and pernicious insects—and the culture has been on that account precarious. It is said that the Caffea Liberica is free from these attacks. More than this, it is said to be adapted to a much cooler climate than the old sort, so that by it the area of coffee culture can be considerably extended.

A LITTLE GIRL, hearing her school teacher spoken of as a painstaking woman, remarked that the scholars were the "painstakingest," for they were generally whipped all round every day.

THE DURBIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents bolls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Mississippi river and bayous	43
Red river	11
Ouachita river	2
Railroads	52
Mobile	2
Total	117

On Saturday there was some inquiry, but without any operations being consummated with the exception of 11 bales. At the same time the favorable tenor of the Liverpool dispatches inspired factors with more confidence. On Monday, although nothing was done to establish any change, there was a manifest disposition among factors to be more stringent in their pretensions, in view of the apprehensions at Memphis of an overflow and the threatening accounts from the upper rivers, as well as of the advance at New York of ⅛c. in spots and ⅛@3-32c. in futures. The only sale reported was 12 bales. On Tuesday there was rather more movement, three buyers coming forward and taking together 187 bales, mostly at firmer or stronger prices. The market was strengthened by the Liverpool dispatches, as well as by apprehensions of injury to the growing crop, referred to above, which have caused a hardening tendency, requiring a slight revision of our quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 162 bales, against 701 for the corresponding time last week and 212 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 994,581 bales, against 1,214,832 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 303,246 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 357,104—3,487,259 against 3,794,363. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 47,151 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 15,134 to France, and of 166,983 to other foreign ports. VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 12, 1875. NO. 33.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Alexander Hamilton, son of the great statesman, is dead. He was ninety years of age.

JACKSONVILLE, ILL., Aug. 3.—The damage to the crops, bridges and railroads in central Illinois is immense. The losses are estimated at $1,000,000; that of Morgan county alone is $250,000.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 4.—The returns come in slowly, but enough is known to render it reasonably certain that the constitutional convention has been called by fifteen thousand majority. Many leading Republicans supported the call, and several Republican counties have given majorities for the convention.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 4.—The special correspondent of the Commercial, who is examining the effects of the flood in southern Ohio, reports tonight having traveled from Portsmouth up the Scioto valley as far as Piketon, finding a continued scene of devastation along the entire route. The Scioto river is still rising, and is over the entire valley, the depth of water ranging from five to thirty inches by actual measurements. He reports three thousand acres of corn gone, causing the entire loss to owners of crops promising an average yield of sixty bushels to the acre. This loss occurs in a territory only sixteen miles long and lying in Scioto county. These figures probably will be increased by the entire destruction of the wheat crop and most of the hay. Northwest from Scioto the line of devastation continues all the way to Columbus. Residents of the valley for fifty years say no similar destruction of crops by an overflow has ever occurred before. The river has been higher, but not at this season of the year. The loss in this valley alone is estimated at over $500,000.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 5.—The water is invading the cellars on Broadway, Sycamore, Main, Walnut and Vine streets, as high as Second street.

This city appeared to be the center of the storm, extending about one hundred miles in each direction. The total damage to railroads, crops and private property in this congressional district is estimated at $10,000,000.

TERRE HAUTE, Aug. 5.—The Wabash is slowly falling. The first mail from the East since Saturday came on last night's train. The Express of this morning estimates the loss to the crops and the destruction of property in fourteen counties tributary to Terre Haute at not less than $12,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—The following was received to-day from Gen. Brannan, at Fort Barrancas:

"No new cases of fever since August 2. Assistant Surgeon H. C. Brown has arrived here. Dr. Sternberg is reported by his physician convalescing this morning. There are now forty-five cases under treatment and seventy-nine convalescent."

NASHVILLE, Aug. 6.—The boiler of a steam thrashing machine on Ben. Harlan's farm, in Maury county, exploded, killing Harlan, his engineer and a colored man. Seven others were wounded, two of whom will probably die.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The following was received from Gen. Brannan, Fort Barrancas, August 7: "No new case, and no death since yesterday's report. Dr. Sternberg is this morning sitting up a little in bed. All the others are doing well. It was Col. Rindall's son, an infant, who died, and not his daughter."

Com. Cooper telegraphs all well at the Pensacola navy-yard.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 7.—McCreary's majority will reach forty-five thousand. The convention is probably lost.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—By an explosion this morning at the arsenal about twenty were injured, some fatally. All were boys. One boy was killed.

OMAHA, Aug. 7.—It is estimated that over one hundred thousand head of Texas cattle were driven into the State this year; of this number forty thousand have been sold.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 8.—The river continues to rise steadily at this point, and has risen one inch during the past twenty-four hours. Capt. Crone, of the Belle of Memphis, reports that a crevasse formed at Willis' plantation, Donaldson's Point, just above Island No. Ten, on Friday night, which swept over that plantation, containing about three thousand acres, and thence to St. Francis valley. This doubtless caused the river to come to a stand here yesterday, and not the crevasse at Bradley's, as at first supposed.

A large volume of water is now running through St. Francis river, which will afford relief to plantations on the Mississippi side to Helena. There is great increase of danger on the Arkansas side, and planters on that shore between here and Helena are working on the levees in the rear to protect their lands from inundation, threatened from that direction. Water now stands four inches below the flood of last spring, and two feet four inches below the great flood of 1867.

A decline of one inch is reported at Cairo to-day.

Old steamboatmen predict that the flood will not exceed that of this spring.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Gen. Brannan telegraphs from Fort Barrancas: "No new cases since Saturday. Hospital Steward William E. Hill is dead; the others are doing well. I doubt if there will be any more deaths."

MEMPHIS, Aug. 9.—The river at this point continues to rise steadily, and has risen about one inch since six o'clock last evening; but, notwithstanding this, the outlook is much more favorable from a decline at Cairo and the report of the officers of the Memphis and Little Rock railroad, along the St. Francis, at Madison, Ark., and in the bottom between this point and that, which was nearly all submerged in April, before the water had reached its present height.

This may be accounted for by the fact that all the bayous and most of the lakes were empty, while the rank vegetation in the bottoms retarded the flow of water from crevasses, and much of it was lost by absorption and evaporation. Unless the danger from the St. Francis increases materially, the damage between here and Helena from that direction will be insignificant and confined to a few plantations.

OMAHA, Aug. 9.—A special from the West reports the grasshoppers very numerous at several points. Immense clouds of insects are still flying southward. There was a good rain early this morning.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The projected constitution declares the State religion to be Roman Catholic; the nation is obliged itself to maintain its worship and its ministers, but nobody shall be molested on Spanish territory for their religious opinions, or in the exercise of their respective worship, so long as the respect due to Christian morality is paid; nevertheless, other public ceremonies or demonstrations than those of the State religion are prohibited. Canonvas del Castildo, president of the constitutional committee, declares the meaning of this to be that Protestants may have churches with open doors, and celebrate worship inside, but there must be no manifestation in the street. It is believed the Cortes will be summoned to meet soon, when the proposed constitution will be submitted; consequently political agitation is recommencing.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Moody and Sankey sailed for New York on the Spain.

COPENHAGEN, August 4.—Hans Christian Andersen, the poet and novelist, died to-day, aged seventy years. His disease was cancer. There is universal mourning in Denmark at his death. Deputations from various parts of this country and elsewhere in Europe will attend his funeral.

ROME, Aug. 6.—The Opinion says the foreign ecclesiastical establishments are preparing the necessary deeds for conversion of their real property into Italian rentes, in conformity with the law of 1873. The sale of the property of the Irish college will begin on the eleventh instant.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The secretary of the Universal Alliance, in a letter to the Times, says Damascus dates of July 22 state that the cholera is raging. Four cases are reported daily, but the real number is concealed. The Christian quarters have been deserted. The mission schools are closed and the children dispersed.

The Pall Mall Gazette says Parliament adjourns on Tuesday to Friday, when it will be prorogued.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—An additional recovery of specie to the amount of $100,000 has been made by the divers at the wreck of the steamer Schiller.

Thanksgiving Day.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me a small space in your excellent CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to tell the brethren everywhere of the doings we had at Magnolia Grange, No. 57, Franklin county, Miss., on the fifteenth instant. But first let me say that the good Lord has given us the most glowing prospect in Mississippi for a bountiful crop that we have had for many years.

A preamble setting forth that fact, in connection with the generally prevailing health in this section of country, was followed by a resolution setting apart Thursday, the fifteenth of July, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to God for those blessings. The preamble and resolution were adopted almost unanimously. Sorry to say there were a few dissenters. Let us say: "Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

In accordance with the resolution a goodly number appeared at the grange, and I am pleased to have it to say that it was a union meeting of Methodists, Baptists and outsiders, and right heartily did hymns of praise ascend from those united voices, and all kneeling before the majesty of Heaven, sent up grateful offerings to him, the Author of all good. It was a refreshing time. All who were present expressed themselves as gratified and thankful that they were there. It was something new under the sun to most of them; but I think it will be for the future an annual offering, as it should be by all who entertain any sense of gratitude in their hearts.

The devil sent a journeyman fiddler up, who, I understood, applied for a job for the night, but could not get one. Thanks to the good sense of the young people. Yours truly,

JOHN SAMPLE.

PRATTVILLE DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Prattville district was held at Lowndesboro, Lowndes county, July 21–25. Everything was there to contribute to the pleasure and interest of the occasion except the presence of the pastor of that charge, Rev. J. M. Mason, who, a few days before, happened to the sad accident of having his leg broken by his horse falling with him. May the Lord speedily restore him to his charge and loved employ! The citizens of Lowndesboro know how to secure the comfort and happiness of a Conference, and this they did fully by supplying everything that heart could wish. Long will they be remembered by us for their hospitality and kindness.

Prominence was given to religious worship on this occasion. Revs. M. S. Andrews, D. D., of Selma, R. B. Crawford, of Demopolis, and A. D. McVoy, president of Centenary Female College, were with us and did valuable service in the sacred desk. Generally the preaching was good, and attended with the power of the Holy Ghost, as was evidenced on Sunday morning at love-feast and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. There was as much interest in the love-feast as I have ever seen, and never have I seen as many partake of the sacrament as on that occasion. The Almighty surely came down in the midst of his people on Sunday in Lowndesboro.

Upon comparison with last year's report of the various charges, we find the church holding its ground in every respect, and in some, of vital importance, advancing. To sum up in a few words: the church is alive and active, and the preachers are generally encouraged to do the work required at their hands. The financial report was not so good as it should have been, but no preacher complained of suffering or neglect. The preachers and people are learning one thing very essential—that is, to sympathize with and appreciate each other's condition. This begets mutual help. We believe the circuits in Prattville district intend to support their pastors as best they can. The missionary report of the district this winter, I have reason to believe, will compare favorably with the other districts of the Alabama Conference. May the church in this district advance even more than in the past. The clergy and laity came together in harmony; thus they labored, and every one returned home, we trust, better and more resolute.

PLEASANT HILL, ALA., July 27, 1875.

VERNON MISSION, JACKSON DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: At the suggestion of my presiding elder I send you a brief statement of the present condition and the prospects of this work.

In January Vernon mission stood thus: Five appointments, one church edifice, and one Methodist society, with nineteen names upon the class-book. A part of the territory comprising this work was new, and another part for a year or so had been unsupplied with a preacher.

At present we have seven appointments, two church buildings, four church organizations, with a membership of sixty-six, and four Sunday schools (all Methodist,) with a membership of one hundred and thirty-three.

Of the names upon the church rolls, seven have been received by faith, and two from the Lutheran Church.

As for baptisms, we have had eight thus far—four children and four adults. I take this opportunity of returning thanks to Rev. C. B. Galloway for assistance rendered me on these and other occasions.

Flagg's chapel, one of my appointments, is a plain, unpretending structure, situated near the railroad, half way between Jackson and Clinton. This building, together with an acre of land, was deeded to us, a few weeks ago, by a good Methodist lady living hard by.

At this place, on the seventeenth and eighteenth of this month, was held our Quarterly Conference. On Saturday the board of stewards was organized, superintendents elected, etc. The salary for the preacher in charge was fixed at $600.

On Sunday, the eighteenth, after the morning sermon by Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, a collection of $6.90 was taken up for the Bishops.

There seems to be a good spirit existing throughout the entire charge—a disposition to go ahead and build up. I think we can safely say that the outlook of this work is hopeful—so hopeful, in fact, that I believe the word mission may be dropped after this year, and the word circuit substituted.

FLOYD, LA.—Mr. Editor: While you are at the "Seashore," enjoying the rich repast—the "annual convocation of the saints"—permit me to trouble you with a line from this division of the Lord's army.

Our third quarterly meeting came off last Saturday and Sunday. O what a crowd! The swamps poured out the people, the woods sent out a sound. The gospel was preached, Christ was honored, and many felt it was good to be there. The last hour came. The preacher called; three persons responded. Their names were taken; they are candidates for baptism and membership. But the meeting must close—not ready to protract. There were several persons present who had not heard the gospel before for five, seven and fifteen years respectively. This is a noticeable feature through this country. Persons are going to church this year who have not gone for years. O God, continue to interest and awaken by thy "almighty power," and may all this country now surrender to thee!

LITTLE RIVER MISSION, LA.—Mr. Editor: This is a new work, just taken up since the last Conference by the Methodists. The people seem to take a great interest in trying to build up Methodism in this country. This section has been reported as a wild, desperate country, but we find it quite different. There are as good people here as you find anywhere. Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard has charge of the work this year. He has had the work at heart, has endured many privations and hardships to awaken the people to a sense of their duty, and has done great good. On the eleventh instant Bro. Sheppard commenced a meeting at Spencer's chapel, and continued it until the sixteenth instant, which resulted in sixteen accessions to the church and the membership greatly revived.

LITTLE RIVER, LA.—Mr. Editor: The Lord has visited Catahoula Lake with an outpouring of his Spirit. Bro. Sheppard, the supply for Little River, has just closed a meeting which has powerfully aroused the people from their lethargy. Sinners have been convicted, mourners converted, and the church mightily strengthened in the faith. We had sixteen or seventeen accessions to our church, and now we have a subscription with enough subscribed to build a neat house for our church. We will subscribe for the ADVOCATE now.

FROM THE CENTRAL PORTION OF TEXAS.

To the Readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, greeting:

We greatly rejoice that you have so excellent a pastor to visit you weekly as bears this communication to your doors. How varied the instruction, how eloquently wise the editorials—the pastoral sermons—with the many spicy exhortations, the experiences of the living soldier and the dying conqueror, with the discreetly selected items of news, civil, social and scientific, all spiced with sparklings of wit and anecdote and laconic wisdom! Surely that man's taste—or woman's either, or child's—must be very greatly perverted not to find here that which will please and profit.

We count you, dear readers of Louisiana, happy in having something of a lull in your social and political atmosphere. Oh! that the storm may pass over, leaving you a cloudless sky, and an atmosphere purified by the lightning and hurricane that have so ruthlessly shaken your whole fabric! But if you doubt the speedy approach of such a time, when you will not be crouched under the despotic dominion of negrocracy, we heartily reach out to you both arms to take you to the very heart of as fine a country as ever listened to the lowing of a cow, or yielded its sheaves to the rejoicing bosom of the happy harvester. Here we have peace. No carpet-bagger's foul tramp breaks our repose; no scalawag pollutes our air by his spouting appeals to the unreasonable prejudices of an unreasoning race of political parvenu; no majority of an alien populace threatens ever to fall as an avalanche on the well-established order of our social system; but every interest prospers, and promises a higher prosperity. The land is laden with breadstuffs. Wheat and corn—more than was ever in the State before—reward the laborer's toil, and invite the immigrant to come and share the bounties spread by the munificent hand of kind Providence.

We have plenty of room, even on our school lands, for a hundred-and-sixty-acre farm for every family of the ADVOCATE subscribers, and then have left vacant in our State more territory than all Louisiana; and this would surely leave room enough for you, Messrs. Editor, Publisher, and all the employees of the office. Why not move over, then, this fall, lock, stock and barrel? Paper, patrons and friends would all get a hearty welcome, for you could no doubt make a profitable partnership with Bro. John, at Galveston, and so supply the whole Southwest with a high grade of pure Christian literature.

Seriously, if any of your readers intend to break up, we think higher inducements await them here than they can find elsewhere. Health, cheap lands, good laws, comparatively light taxation, a very large school fund, a bright prospect of future prosperity, call you to look here before you settle elsewhere. I own only five acres myself. I am in no way connected with any land agency or immigration scheme. I have no sort of personal interest to subserve. I desire, it is true, to see my beloved State settled up by just such citizens as are the readers of the ADVOCATE, and I desire their well-being; hence I have written thus to them.

I have recently attended the District Conference for the Weatherford district, Northwest Texas Conference. Much interest was manifested in the affairs of the church. At the first roll-call—Wednesday, July 7, at nine o'clock A. M.—a response came from every charge save one. Ten out of fourteen itinerant members answered. One of the four was sick, and two came in afterward. I did not hear from the fourth. A large number of the thirty-seven local preachers and fifty-two delegates were present. Quite a general revival spirit was manifest through nearly every part of the district. A number of churches had been organized since Conference. In the midst of the most stringent times, several thousand dollars had been raised and expended in building and finishing churches and parsonages. Some of the preachers had been tolerably well sustained, while others had endured much from the failure of their people to meet the stinted pittance assessed for their support. Oh! how we do need a few presiding elders who could exercise the same influence as he of Post Oak circuit. If he had not gone up higher I should plead for his transfer until he should have spent one year at least on each district in our Conference. I do not complain of our corps of presiding elders. Perhaps no Conference of its age can boast of a better. We are blessed in this respect, but our people, in only quite moderate circumstances, and thrown together from the four corners, stand greatly in need of proper training in this as well as in some other respects. We think, however, that progress is as rapid as perhaps anywhere else within our beloved South.

Of the fifteen itinerants of our District Conference, the presiding elder, T. W. Hines, William Price and S. D. Akin came here from the Mississippi Conference; M. D. Fly, L. W. Reeves and M. L. Martin from the North Mississippi. Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky supplied nearly all the remainder.

Baton Rouge and Its Schools.

MR. EDITOR: In these times of general shrinkage in finance, crops and morals, when in State and Church we find contraction and collapse where we looked for expansion and full growth, it is no small pleasure to meet a person or see an institution not numbered among these contractiles. It is indeed a rare pleasure to see, now and then, a cheerful, hopeful face, a prospering school, an advancing, holy church, whose spirits are high and whose purse is not shrunken. We may congratulate the people of Baton Rouge and vicinity upon the sacred estate into which they have entered of equal, honestly-come-by poverty. The good Goddess of Poverty has dispensed her blessing with equal hand, without distinction of race, color or previous condition. She has passed by none of us. We are poor but honest, poor but alive. That is ground for profound gratitude and congratulation. Well, here in our poverty we are making many rich. We have churches and schools in this town that move on in spite of the times—two schools that would honor any town. Who has not heard of Readville Seminary for young ladies, and the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute for boys? From these have gone out, all over the land, true men and women of full measure, graduated and equipped for a vigorous life. There is no shrinkage here. True, there has been a sad falling off of numbers in attendance, and a sadder falling off in the pay of teachers—more in promises, less in actual receipts—yet no falling off in earnest devotion and thoroughness in teaching.

Just as everything else is failing and contracting in this day of our common poverty, there arises a band of noblemen and women to confer on this poverty-stricken people a wealth imperishable. The times evoke the talent and genius of the best and truest of our people. Men and women answer the call, and they "go and teach." This is their vocation. They teach because they must teach—not a profession or a business, as if to teach for a living, but they live to teach; for surely they do not find it to be a life of ease or wealth; but, like their Master, the great teacher, they become poor that we through their poverty might be made rich. The grace of liberality abounds in their deep poverty, and our teachers are the wealth of the nation. Oh, that our Southern people would seize this their opportunity—the heritage of poverty. Now, since you cannot leave your children money and lands (a doubtful boon,) you should leave them that more priceless heritage of unalienable wealth—a Christian education. Educate your sons and daughters. This is all you can give them, and is the only thing. Is there not hope in the land where there are these devoted, self-sacrificing teachers?—generous and refined, thorough and patient as ours are. Have you a daughter you wish to see a true Christian woman? Send her to the Readville Seminary, for there she will be surrounded by influences ennobling, and associated with one who is at once a mother and a teacher, instructing the heart and mind in the true, beautiful and holy. Bring your sons and daughters, and come with them and see for yourselves our schools and teachers—the Readville Seminary, Mrs. M. W. Read, principal, for young ladies; and for the boys the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, principal.

The scholastic year commences on the first of October and closes the last of June.

A TRUE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.—Mr. Editor: On the day we held our missionary mass meeting, in the Methodist church at this place, a little girl, twelve years old, subscribed $2, remarking at the time that she would pay it as soon as she could make the money. Yesterday she paid her subscription out of money for which she labored with her own hands. She is also paying $1 to the Sunday School Missionary Society, which makes a total of $3 this year. Will not those of our church who have means, and do so little for this great cause, resolve to do more when they read this?

SABBATH REST.

A hallowed foretaste of its life and light;
A day of rest, foreshadowing the completeness
Of days which know no night.

Six days of weariness and toil, succeeded
By the calm quietude of Sabbath rest,
Train us to welcome what we so much needed,
And make it doubly blest.

Here our best joys and fairest flowers are mortal;
We can but rest in peace one day in seven:
But yonder, soon as we pass Death's dread portal,
Eternal rest is given!

The Sabbath there, in high communion blending
With Christ, and all the heaven-bound pilgrim train;
Is more than blessed; but soon it has its ending,
And earth is earth again.

But yonder, in the land of milk and honey,
Where Jordan flows, the rest is evermore—
One everlasting Sabbath, bright and sunny,
Shines on that blissful shore!

All is immortal there; joys never wither,
And days no longer shadow into night;
With steady pace our feet are traveling thither,
To gain that land of light.

Oh, happy Sabbath! when the church shall gather
Escaped forever from earth's wearying strife,
Like children round the table of their Father,
To live the deathless life;

And join the rapturous song of adoration
With all who fought the fadeless crown to win;
Oh, endless Sabbath! Chorus of salvation!
When will thy joys begin?

Alabama Conference.—Selma District Conference.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Your Committee on the State of the Church in the Selma district, Alabama Conference, after a patient hearing and consideration of the reports from the various charges, submit the following report:

The spiritual condition of the church, though not satisfactory, is highly encouraging. The membership of our church have not reached that high standard of piety required by the word of God, or exhibited in the lives of many of those sainted men of ancient or modern times given us as examples of holiness; yet they are seeking higher attainments in vital godliness and Christian experience. As evidences of this progress in divine life and growth in grace, your committee refer to the decided increase of attendance upon the ministry of the word, and the ordinances and meetings of the church; the freedom of our membership from indulgence in the sale and use of spirits, and in those diversions so popular with the people of the world; their cheerful compliance with disciplinary rules; the ready and better support of the ministry and of the cause of missions, and their more general devotion to family prayer.

These indications of improvement, all of which are contained in the reports from the fields of labor, cannot be fairly attributed to mere morality of conduct or an empty profession of faith. They certainly are, to a very large extent, the fruits of the Spirit and of the power of experimental religion. Where such sentiments prevail and such manifestations are given there must be much spirituality and consecration. Having gained this vantage ground, let the church purify herself of all unrighteousness and worldly-mindedness, and press on to sanctification. The church is the bride of Christ. Let us be vigilant to keep her unspotted from the world, uncorrupted by its maxims and customs.

The property of the church in this district is well secured in title, is free from incumbrances, and generally in a good state of repair.

Your committee regret to state, however, that some of our circuits are not provided with suitable parsonages. A due regard for the comfort of our preachers and their families should prompt us to supply this want. Good policy even demands that every preacher with a family should have a pleasant home of his own, and without it he cannot serve his flock with satisfaction or success.

There are two missions in this district—the Bigbee mission and the East Selma and Benton mission. The reports from these works show a decided increase of interest and prosperity; they are well served, and will soon be self-sustaining. There is no other field of labor within our bounds where missions can be established with profit to our cause.

The financial condition of the district, as represented by the collections for the support of the ministry, for missions and the other enterprises of the church, is in a comparatively prosperous condition, considering the general state of the country and the ability of our people. The different charges are taking care of their preachers, and the stewards are practicing more system and manifesting greater diligence in this all-important branch of their duty. The following resolution has been passed by this Conference, and your committee urge a strict compliance with its requirements wherever practicable:

Resolved, That the assessment plan adopted by the Alabama Conference for raising preachers' salaries be observed throughout the Selma district.

You will permit this committee to state here that our preachers have labored faithfully and with the hope of very little pecuniary reward. They have shown a willingness to share our misfortunes, have suffered privations without murmur, and have contributed very much, both in counsel and in life, to the sentiment and practice, among their respective charges, of economy and resignation to the hardships common to our whole country.

The Sabbath school cause is more prosperous than ever known in the history of our church. The number of schools and pupils is greatly increased, and the church is constantly recruiting her ranks, and drawing much of her strength and energy from this department of the service. The schools are well managed, the system of teaching is becoming more methodical, and all its appliances and exercises are well adapted to the ultimate design of the institution—the salvation of the children. The uniform lessons are generally used, and give universal satisfaction. The committee recommend them as worthy of universal adoption.

Our church papers and literature are not as well patronized by our people as our necessities require, or as their merits deserve. The New Orleans Christian Advocate especially should visit the household of every Methodist family. Besides our relation to it as the official organ of our Conference, it contains much information and news absolutely essential to the intelligent understanding of our doctrines and the progress of our church.

Your committee are unwilling to close this report without a declaration of their indorsement of the official career of our presiding elder, the Rev. A. J. Briggs, during his term of service for the last four years. Their position as laymen, and his ineligibility to his present office among us another term, remove any impropriety or indelicacy that would ordinarily attach to such an expression. And representing nine of the charges of this district, and possessing, as they think they do, a very reliable knowledge of his labors, they are unanimous in this expression of their high appreciation both of his pulpit and administrative abilities. By his capacity and energy and judicious management of men and measures, to a very large degree, this district has been well sustained through successive disasters of flood and drouth, and has been elevated to the front rank of position among the districts of the Alabama Conference.

Levi W. Reeves, Chair'n.

The Providences of God.

Mr. Editor: It does seem that the Bible tells us plainly enough what the will of God is—that he wills that which is good, and not that which is evil. And yet, in regard to his providences, how various are the opinions of men. Not only do men of different denominations differ on this subject, but members of the same church; and members and even ministers of the Methodist Church differ greatly in their opinions in regard to what we should understand by the providences of God. One will say: "Everything happens for the best;" another: "Well, I suppose it had to be so;" and another: "Whatever befalls us is providential;" and yet another—as I heard a Methodist minister, occupying a high position in the church, once say while officiating at the funeral of one who had been slain by the hand of his fellow, in referring to the sad occurrence, call it: "This sad dispensation of God's providence;" and still another, a Methodist minister (as we were on our way to the burial of a man who in a drunken spree fell from his horse and was killed) said: "How strange are the providences of God!"

Now, Mr. Editor, it is true that the Bible teaches us that God exercises both a general and a special providence over his creatures—the former implies the latter; but it nowhere teaches that in so doing he deprives us of our free agency.

In our last and ruined condition he provides for our redemption, he teaches us the way of life, he woos and invites us to the path of peace, and warns us to turn from the ways of sin and death; yet he suffers us, if we heed not his invitations and warnings, to go in the ways of death. And while he gives no one permission to do us evil, yet as all men are free to do, or not do, he suffers men to do each other wrong, except it may be in extraordinary cases, where he restrains the wrath of man.

Now it does seem clear that if whatever befalls us is providential, then it is right; and if right, it is not wrong, consequently not sin, but the will of God. Wicked men then do the will of God when they persecute his people. Again, some will say that persecutions are necessary to keep us humble. Then sin is necessary, and, if evil at all, a necessary evil, helping in the great work of redemption, filling up certain deficiencies in the great plan of salvation; wicked men and devils becoming co-workers with God and all good men in saving the world; they themselves not guilty of wrong, because they did the will of God.

O that Methodists, and especially Methodist ministers, would cease to teach the doctrine of predestination.

A Methodist.

Our Baby.

Of course he is the dearest, sweetest, smartest baby that ever lived. Any sensible person will at once admit the fact if they are not blinded by jealousy! We think so because he is our baby? O no; we couldn't help seeing his superiority to other babies if he wasn't our baby. Why he stood alone at eight months, commenced walking at eleven, has been going without intermission ever since, and we defy any one to produce a baby that can talk as plain as he can! He has attained the venerable age of eighteen months, can understand everything, run small errands, and it is the current belief in the family that he will commence climbing the "steep hill of knowledge" when he is in the neighborhood of two years.

It is simply ridiculous how selfish some people are of our acquaintance. They cannot see anything out of the common run in our darling, and positively listen to our eulogiums with indifference; of course they are wrapped up in their great, mushy, stupid babies, and won't see.

Now our baby is a little, neat, plump fellow, all activity and mischief. I never could tell you how pretty he is, but I will tell you he has blue eyes, a mouth like a rosebud, and golden hair in silky waves, with a tiny curl nestling here and there. I must confess, though, he has—a pug nose! We feel our hearts so full of love, we are willing to overlook the pug nose. You would too if you only knew him, and felt the charm of his sweet, winning ways, the graceful poise of the little head on the round, dimpled neck and shoulders. He used to be such a comfortable baby to carry when he was in long clothes. With no superabundance of flabby flesh, he never kept perpetually sliding through one's arms like some babies; but, as compact as a ball, he always stayed in the right place, and, seeming to know if he slipped he would be in danger of making a very small boy of himself, he acted accordingly.

While I am writing he is screaming, it must be confessed, in a very unamiable manner. But we are all bad sometimes. He may be crying for something he ought not have. Don't we all wish for things we should not have, and would not know what to do with if we did have them?

Our baby! Would that we could always keep you a baby, and shield you from the coming storms. Alas! life's decrees are inexorable; we will have to passively watch you drifting from us into manhood, and see all its dark shadows settle upon that bright head. We can only pray, when old age lends you toward your last resting-place, that death will convey a perfect life to a beautiful fruition in heaven.

Ruskin on Conscience and Training

It has been a prevalent notion in the minds of well-disposed persons that if they acted according to their own conscience, they must, therefore, be doing right. But they assume, in feeling or asserting this, either that there is no law of God, or that it cannot be known, but only felt or conjectured. "I must do what I think right." How often is this sentence uttered and acted on—bravely, nobly, innocently—but always, because of its egotism, erringly. You must not do what you think right, but, whether you or anybody think or don't think it, what is right. "I must act according to the dictates of my conscience." By no means, my conscientious friend, unless you are quite sure yours is not the conscience of an ass. "I am doing my best; what can man do more?" You might be doing much less, and yet much better; perhaps you are doing your best in producing or doing an eternally bad thing. All these three sayings, and the convictions they express, are wise only in the months and minds of wise men; they are deadly, and all the deadlier because bearing an image and superscription of virtue, in the months and minds of fools. "But there is every gradation, surely, between wisdom and folly." No. The fool, whatever his wit, is the man who doesn't know his master—who has said in his heart: "There is no God"—no law. The wise man knows his master. Less or more wise, he perceives lower or higher masters; but always some creature larger than himself—some law holier than his own. A law to be sought, learned, loved, obeyed; but, in order to its discovery, the obedience must be begun first, to the best one knows. Obey something, and you will have a chance some day of finding out what is best to obey. But if you begin by obeying nothing, you will end by obeying Beelzebub and all his seven invited friends.

My mother never gave me more to learn than she knew I could easily get learned, if I set myself honestly at work, by twelve o'clock. She never allowed anything to disturb me when my task was set; if it was not said rightly by twelve o'clock I was kept in till I knew it; and in general, even when Latin grammar came to supplement the Psalms, I was my own master for at least an hour before dinner at half-past one, and for the rest of the afternoon. My mother, herself finding her chief personal pleasure in her flowers, was often planting or pruning beside me—at least if I chose to stay beside her. I never thought of doing anything behind her back which I would not have done before her face; and her presence was therefore no restraint to me; but also no particular pleasure; for, from having always been left so much alone, I had generally my own little affairs to see after; and on the whole, by the time I was seven years old, was already getting too independent, mentally, even of my father and mother; and having nobody else to be dependent upon, began to lead a very small, perky, contented, conceited, Cock-Robinson-Crusoe sort of life, in the central point which it appeared to me (as it must naturally appear to geometrical animals) that I occupied in the universe.—Fors Clavigera.

Obituaries.

Rev. William McCormick was born in South Carolina, October 27, 1796, and died at his residence in Jasper county, Miss, June 24, 1875, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. Bro. McCormick was converted to God and joined the Methodist Church in the latter part of the month of April, 1820, and was ever after a most worthy member and zealous Christian. He felt for many years that he was called to preach the gospel of Christ, but a naturally timid disposition and the constantly accumulating wants of a growing family seemed for a time to afford him a plausible excuse for delay. He did not consent to take license to preach until the autumn of 1839—about the time his father, Rev. John McCormick, ceased from his ministerial labors. When he did take upon himself the holy office and work of a minister he went at it with a zeal and earnestness worthy of the cause, doing a great deal of good for the first two years of his ministry as a local preacher, and in the fall of 1841 he joined the traveling connection. From that time on, as long as his health enabled him, he continued to be a zealous, faithful, efficient worker in God's great harvest field, working much of his time without asking or expecting any earthly reward. After about ten years' hard toil in the itinerancy of the Methodist Protestant Church his health failed, and he was compelled to take first a supernumerary and then a superannuated relation to the Conference. The latter relation, by the unanimous voice of his brethren, he continued to hold until his death.

We will notice briefly some of his distinguishing characteristics:

As a Christian.—He was pre-eminently pious. No man bore about in his body more of the marks of the Lord Jesus, more of the beautiful characteristics of Christian piety, more of the sweet and gentle spirit of our holy religion, than did our beloved brother, William McCormick. Religion was first, was middle, was last with him in everything. It was the all-absorbing theme of his life.

As a minister.—Take him as a whole, he was the best model of a minister of the gospel I ever knew. He always went from his knees to the pulpit. While there his heart seemed all aglow with love. The burden of every theme was love. Love was the power by which he endeavored to attract all hearts to Christ, and, when attracted, love was the power by which he sought to hold them there. If he dwelt on the torments of the damned, it was to show the great love of Christ in dying to rescue a lost world from such a fearful doom. If he dwelt on the tragic scenes of Calvary, it was to show how love constrained Christ to suffer and bleed and die to redeem our fallen race. His Christian experience was love. Sanctification with him was the attainment of perfect love. His heaven was the length and breadth and height and depth of God's redeeming love. His preparations for the pulpit were elaborate and ample. He read much, thought much and prayed much over almost every sermon he attempted to preach. He was a great reader of the Bible and other good books. I suppose he read the Bible regularly through from the beginning of Genesis to the end of Revelation more than fifty times. Dr. A. Clarke's Commentaries, Mr. Watson's Theological Institutes, Mosheim's History of the Church and D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation were as familiar to him as the study of nearly half a century could make them. It was my good fortune to be placed on the Jasper circuit with him, as junior preacher, in the very commencement of my ministry. From his sweet spirit, his fervent piety, his studious habits, his grave deportment, his untiring industry, and his habit of praying so much more than any other man I ever knew, I derived much benefit. I do not think I was ever with him as much as two hours at a time during the thirty odd years of our acquaintance without feeling that I had been benefited by his company.

As a husband and father.—Our brother was twice married. His first wife was a Miss Matchet, a most excellent Christian lady, who bore him ten children, eight of whom survive. His second wife was a Miss Meek, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. James Meek, of Attala county, Miss. By her he has three children, all living. Our brother strove with all his might to train his family in the ways of piety. And, thank God, he succeeded. His large family of sons and daughters are nearly all professors of religion and members of the church. Two of his sons, grown men, have died in the faith and preceded him to the better land. Our dear brother was sorely afflicted for many years before his death; so much so that he was seldom able to leave his premises to preach, or even to visit his nearest neighbors. But he bore his afflictions like a Christian philosopher, never uttering a murmuring word. Through all these long years of suffering and sorrow he seemed at all times ready and willing to go, but never restless and in haste to depart. He was calmly and patiently waiting the Lord's time. From the last letter I ever received from him I take the following extract. He says:

"I write to let you know I am still alive. God be praised! I am very feeble. I am so nervous I cannot sit or write with any satisfaction. Cannot think as formerly. I cough and suffer a great deal, and my diabetes continues unchanged ever since you saw me last. The great wonder is that I am yet here. I am able to be up some nearly every day, and to walk a little about the house and garden. But I am worn out. I wait and abide my heavenly Father's will. I am on the verge of the land of rest, and I hope to meet you there. We traveled and preached some together. O when I think of our meeting up there I almost shout! You will be left here when I am gone. I want you to write my obituary and preach my funeral, if at all convenient. It will please all my friends and children. The simple facts in the case are enough. I derive some pleasure from reading the Advocate and other papers, but my mind and my eyes are so bad that my enjoyment is nothing like it used to be. I am now almost seventy-seven years old. I have enjoyed some happiness in life, and have performed a great deal of hard labor. My best days and my best enjoyments have been about thine altars, O Lord of hosts! My services have been few and poor and lean, but they are with Christ. I leave all with him. I have trusted him long, and I feel that I can trust him to the end."

Bro. McCormick's letter was written October 16, 1873—nearly two years before his death. He continued in the same tranquil, trusting state of mind until he breathed his last, which he did about three o'clock P. M. on the twenty-fourth of June. To him, in the words of the poet:

"Death is the crown of life:
Were death denied, poor man would live in vain:
Death wounds to cure: we fall, we rise, we reign:
Spring from our fetters, hasten to the skies;
When blooming Eden gathers on our sight
The King of Terrors is the Prince of Peace."

A mother in Israel passed away from among us on the night of the third instant. Mrs. Elizabeth Miller died at the residence of her son, President J. C. Miller, in Jackson, La., on the third of July, 1875. She was a native of the town of Casanovia, in Madison county, N. Y., and was born September 2, 1798.

Her parents were not professors of religion, although believers in the Bible, and respecters of good people. They taught their children to fear God, and to say the Lord's Prayer, with the additional child's prayer at night; "Here I lay me down to sleep," etc. This was the sum of her religious education until she was eleven years of age; then, being afflicted by the death of a younger sister, she began to call upon God in the sincere use of the forms of prayer which she had learned. In her journal, kept by herself through a course of sixty years, she laments that there were no Sabbath schools in the community in which she lived, and that the only Christians there were Calvinistic Baptists, whose principal themes were the eternal decrees and immersion. By these influences was her mind darkened and confused until she knew not what to do; fortunately, however, a minister of another "faith and order" began to preach in the neighborhood, who taught the people that they were sinners redeemed by Christ, who might then repent, believe and be saved. She believed this, and began to seek the Lord earnestly when she was but thirteen; but, having no one to lead her to Christ, and being surrounded and influenced by the ungodly, she neglected the means of grace, and turned in a measure to the world. For several years she continued in this state, praying and hoping to be a Christian, but never surrendering herself fully to the Lord, although in the church and a zealous Methodist so far as decided preference for that church was concerned. She dates her conversion from 1820. In her journal that year she writes: "I prayed much, and obtained the evidence of my acceptance, but not that spotless purity I hoped to get." From this time her pence flowed as a river. Of the next year she writes: "I felt as if I had none on earth but my Savior. I sought the Lord with my whole heart, and found much peace." She was now able to bear with patience and fortitude the trials of life, and to labor earnestly for the salvation of others. In this labor of love she found pleasure and profit. The next year brought sore trials, but none of these moved her, save to press her nearer to her Savior. Having been so wonderfully blessed at the first camp meeting, it is not strange that she loved these gatherings of the hosts of Israel. In 1827 she attended three of them, all of which were profitable to her for edification and growth in grace, especially the third, at which her oldest son, A. G. Miller, was converted in his twelfth year. This filled her soul with gladness, and led to more earnest determination to train all her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, which she did with exemplary perseverance and success. Three of her sons became and are now ministers of the gospel. The prayer of her heart and the grand object of her life was the education and salvation of her children. While striving to attain these ends, she was not indifferent to the spiritual interests of others. The Sabbath school found in her a true friend and faithful teacher for many years. We rejoice to be able to write that her path was that of the just, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. A few quotations from her journal will illustrate this. January 1, 1858, she writes: "I feel to-day that God is love, and that I love him and his holy law." Again, in 1861, she says: "I am sixty-three to-day. I find God loves me still, though so unworthy." Her last entry was made on the eighth of June, 1875: "The love of God is around me. I have comfort in believing, yet I want more of that love which makes me happy."

In her last hours she was resigned to the will of God and felt his love. Thus lived and died one of the best and most consecrated of God's children. She served him to the best of her ability, "in spirit and in truth." She was characterized by strong sense, firmness, energy, perseverance, and consecration to her family and to the church of her choice in all its interests. We thank God for her work of faith and labor of love. Now, her work done, her trials past, she rests from her labors, and her works do follow her. God grant that he who wrote and they who read this may be followers of all those who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises.

Jackson, La., July 20, 1875.

Agnes, only child of J. C. and L. A. Wilburn, was born August 19, 1874. On the twenty-eighth of September following she was dedicated to God in holy baptism, and on the sixteenth day of June, 1875, after a painful illness of several weeks duration, her deathless spirit took its flight to the spirit world. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Died, at Hermitage plantation, Holmes county, Miss., on the sixth of July, 1875, at twelve o'clock M., Mrs. S. A. Lurty, formerly wife of Col. J. S. Scott.

Says the New York Tribune: "The Rev. Asher Wright, the quiet New Englander, who, almost unaided, civilized the Iroquois Indians on the Cattaraugus Reservation, died among them a few days ago. Most of them were thoroughly ignorant pagans when he first went to them; he leaves them Christians, the supporters of churches and schools, and the owners of excellent farms. The modest old man was indefatigable in his work. He translated a part of the Bible into the Iroquois language, and even studied medicine for the benefit of his pupils, thus for most of his kindly life caring for both their souls and bodies."

It is from this heaven-born ignorance in women, of the insuperable difficulties of doing right, that men take fire and accomplish the sublime impossibilities. Our sense of details our fatal habit of reasoning, paralyze us; we need the impulse of the pure ideal which we can only get from them.—Howells.

TAKE ALL.

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee.

Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of thy love.

Take my feet, and let them be
Swift and "beautiful" for thee.

Take my voice, and let me sing
Always, only, for my King.

Take my lips, and let them be Filled with messages from thee.

Take my silver and my gold;
Not a mite would I withhold.

Take my moments and my days;
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.

Take my intellect, and use
Every power as thou shalt choose.

Take my will, and make it thine;
It shall be no longer mine.

Take my heart; it is thine own;
It shall be thy royal throne.

Take my love; my Lord, I pour
At thy feet its treasure-store.

Take myself, and I will be Ever, only, ALL for thee.

Steady and Strong.

Who is bold enough to arraign the pride of works? "Behold what a worker he is!" So runs the omnibus compliment of the day. We resolutely believe in William Tell and the apple, let archæological iconoclasts say what they will. The hero did really shoot the apple off the boy's head. But what a narrow chance it was! He might have split the head instead of the apple, you know, and that would have been unlucky. We are intimidated by a like liability in aiming at that busy, bustling idleness, which just now passes current for overwork, albeit the apple is a green squash. The clerical Daniel O'Connell shouts: Work, work, work! and the admiring peasantry greet his wisdom with a wild hoorah! Daniel is tongney and tireless and versatile. He runs four jackplanes, six handsaws, nine cross-cuts, a steam engine, a saw mill, a patent churn, a thrashing machine, and seven different kinds of sewing machines, all at once. He is "prodigious smart." If any one suggests, as envious people sometimes do, that his pond will run out, he is instantly smothered with the proposal: "Pump Lake Erie dry, will ye?" That squelcher takes the buckram out of a man, and he subsides. Perhaps he carries on a frightened thinking, to the effect that Lake Erie could be pumped dry easily enough if it were not for the big and little streams that keep flowing in out of the forest shades, and the cool, deep solitudes. It would go dry of itself, just from the glare of perpetual publicity and windy agitation. Often and often the biggest swells are groundswells. And as to breakers, which also depend on the shallowing of the water, they are "powerful weak" for the noise they make. They never carry off the edges of the continents. It takes the deep sea currents to do that. In fact they are dangerous to nobody but the poor fellows who are trying to ride atop of them. Many an overworker fondly imagines that he is turning the world upside down, when in fact he is just rolling over and over with the same familiar swash of sand and seaweed. Now he preaches his lectures, and now he lectures his preach. A close hearer can generally tell which he is doing by remembering how he started. If he opens with, "Our text may be found," he is going to preach it; but if he begins with, "Ladies and gentlemen, fellow-citizens, and people from the country, the subject which I have the honor to discuss before you," then the venerable hash is to be served up a la lecture. The distinction is of great practical value, particularly by virtue of that strong initial, d, which squats on the lawful domain of e, x, t, and holds against all the writs of magistracy.

Are we hitting the apple, or the head? The apple (squash, if you please) is the thing we are shooting at. With honest working—which pours in as much as it pours out, with a fair allowance for evaporation, accident and the demands of growth—we have no quarrel. It is the other thing, the pseudo, which runs and roars and sweats, and jingles the old bell with a new handle, and says to itself, comfortingly, after all the fuss and foam, "The sleep of a laboring man is sweet," if only such a man did not have to lie broad awake to prop his reputation against the uncertain gusts that sweep down these narrow canyons with hurricane force. Stand still (not on stilts) and see the salvation of God. It is wiser to come forth from the silence and down from the mount of vision and communion. The Merced river is a respectable little stream, even in low water, when it runs quietly between becoming banks, but in leaping down Yosemite it all goes to mist long enough before it reaches bottom. Over-ardent men run so fast to a fire that they can do nothing but pant and gasp after they get there. The hero who rushed to the defense of his country's flag with a broom-handle for a gun was brave, no doubt, but his wisdom was debatable. Wait to grind your ax before you attack the thick trees of the forest. Load, then take aim, then fire. Because some people grind and grind and grind their axes all away, and other people load their guns with such tamping and over-wadding that they are sure to burst at the first fire, if perchance they go off at all, is no reason why other some should undertake to chop with a wedge or shoot with a hoe-handle.

A bishop, whose robust good sense has a curt way of "cutting off debate," was sorely annoyed by a brother in Conference who popped up and out on every side of every subject. When patience ceased to be a virtue, and hope (of reformation) deferred began to make the heart sick, he said: "Brother, your way of doing reminds me of the description which an Arkansas poet gives of the struggles and demise of a Mississippi flatboat:

"'She sot and heaved and heaved and sot,
And high her anchor flung;
But every time she sot and heaved
A wusser leak she sprung.'"

I have a mind to say something as unhandsomely expressive of a class of self-appreciating, overworked men, but my constitutional gentleness forbids. I will say, in a soft and persuasive tone: Brethren, hold on, be steady; stop and load up before you start your wagon; take a gentle astringent, for fear that complaint of yours may become chronic. "God never employs a fool when he can use a wise man just as well." Sit down and wipe the perspiration. Put ice on your heads. You can't be preacher, lecturer, chorister, insurance agent, high constable, ward politician, county superintendent, editor, candidate for Congress, and camp meeting committee, all at once. The more there is to do the less time have we to gush over things, and run empty wheelbarrows across hollow pavements. It is best not to work miscellaneously, but to take hold when we ought, as we ought. And there is precisely as much wisdom to be shown in letting go as in laying hold. It is possible to hold on too long, just because the hold is easy and we are used to it. We hold on to a spavined old sinner who has taken our gospel purgatives for the last thirty years without a sign of improvement, or to a community whose dust ought to have been shaken from our feet years ago, and let a hundred new fresh chances slide away to the vanishing-point without a symptom of uneasiness. Whether we lay hold or let go, therefore, be sure to do everything with preparedness and purpose. Be steady and strong, remembering always that "we" have never exhorted you to be steady and—weak.—M. C. B., in Western Christian Advocate.

Periodicity of Thunder Storms.

Herr von Bezold, of Munich, has published some interesting researches on the periodical changes in the frequency of thunder storms during long periods of time. These researches are particularly noteworthy for the original manner in which the author has used the statistical materials on thunder storms which he could obtain (principally within the kingdom of Bavaria.) As the character of our reports will not permit us to give details with regard to the manner of treatment, we pass at once to the results which Herr von Bezold has arrived at.

First of all it was found that the frequency of thunder storms during a long period is generally either on a continuous increase or decrease, and that these variations are periodical.

If we ask on which other meteorological phenomena these variations could possibly depend, the first thing to be considered is the temperature. It is further advisable, on account of the numerous relations that have lately been discovered to exist between sun-spots and meteorological phenomena, to turn attention also in this direction. It has been found in reality that if we represent the variations of the frequency of thunder storms by a curve, and compare the same with the curve of the frequency of sun-spots, the minima of the thunder storm curve coincide exactly with the maxima in the sun-spot curve. On the other hand, the thunder storm curve forms, to a certain extent, the mean between the sun-spot curve and the curve of the deviation of the average yearly temperature for our latitudes.

We must observe here that although the path of the thunder storm curve shows a general and unmistakable connection with that of the sun-spot curve (so that, for instance, for the period from 1775 to 1822 the maxima of the thunder storm curve coincide almost completely with the minima of the sun-spot curve,) yet the details of the thunder storm curve coincide better with the details of the curve of temperatures, so that nearly every rise or fall in the latter can be distinctly traced in the former. This connection between thunder storms and the deviations of the yearly temperatures from the total average shows itself still clearly, even where that between thunder storm and sun-spot curves is less apparent.

Herr von Bezold recapitulates the results of his investigations as follows: High temperatures, as well as a solar surface free from spots, cause a greater number of thunder storms during a year than the reverse. Now, as the maxima in the frequency of sun-spots coincide with the maxima of the intensity of aurora borealis, it follows that both groups of electrical phenomena—thunder storms and aurora—complement each other, as it were, so that in years with many thunder storms aurora will be rare, and vice versa.

From this connection between sun-spots and thunder storms an immediate electric action between the earth and the sun does not necessarily follow, but it may be simply a consequence of the magnitude of insolation, which depends on the frequency of spots. These changes in the insolation are not felt simultaneously but successively in the different latitudes. The phenomena of thunder storms, however, do not only depend on the conditions of temperature at a given locality, but also on the state of the atmosphere at far distant points, belonging to another zone; and this is most evident with thunder storms accompanying strong currents of wind or tempests. In this manner the peculiar intermediary position which the thunder storm curve occupies between the curves of temperature and sun-spots might perhaps find its explanation eventually.—Nature.

A Patriotic Girl.

At the time Gen. Greene retreated before Lord Rawdon from Ninety-Six, when he had passed Broad river, he was very desirous to send an order to Gen. Sumter, who was on the Wateree, to join him, that they might attack Rawdon, who had divided his force. But the general could find no man in that part of the State who was bold enough to undertake so dangerous a mission. The country to be passed through for many miles was full of bloodthirsty tories, who, on every occasion that offered, imbrued their hands in the blood of the Whigs. At length Emily Geiger presented herself to Gen. Greene, and proposed to act as his messenger; and the general, both surprised and delighted, closed with her proposal. He accordingly wrote a letter and delivered it, and at the same time communicated the contents of it verbally, to be told to Sumter in case of accident.

Emily was young, but as to her person or adventures on the way we have no further information except that she was mounted on horseback upon a side-saddle, and on the second day of her journey she was intercepted by Lord Rawdon's scouts. Coming from the direction of Greene's army, and not being able to tell an untruth without blushing, Emily was suspected and confined to a room; and, as the officer in command had the modesty not to search her at the time, he sent for an old tory matron as more fitting for that purpose. Emily was not wanting in expedient, and as soon as the door was closed and the bustle a little subsided, she ate up the letter, piece by piece. After awhile the matron arrived, and upon searching carefully, nothing was to be found of a suspicious nature about the prisoner, and she would disclose nothing. Suspicion being thus allayed, the officer commanding the scouts suffered Emily to depart whither she said she was bound; but she took a route somewhat circuitous to avoid further detention, and soon after struck into the road to Sumter's camp, where she arrived in safety. Emily told her adventure, and delivered Greene's verbal message to Sumter, who, in consequence, soon after joined the main army at Orangeburg.—Noble Deeds of American Women.

THE WEARING OF MOURNING.—The etiquette of mourning is far more expensive and cumbrous in Great Britain than in this country. If a relative dies the whole family, servants included, must wear black at least six months, and where the relationship is large and several deaths follow each other in tolerably quick succession, the confinement to habiliments of woe, even where no grief is felt, becomes very protracted. If a person attends a funeral he must be dressed in mourning, and many persons wear black for some weeks or months for a friend to whom they are not related. The London Queen thus illustrates certain features of this servitude: Suppose one to have six brothers and sisters who marry; there are then twelve near relatives, at the death of each of whom custom provides a "family mourning" for six months. Then there are other twelve months for each of the parents of the heads of the family, and possibly two or three children of his own, to say nothing of all the nephews and nieces, and other casuals. Here we have no less than sixteen years of life to be spent in black—that is to say, one-half of the expectation in life is to be spent in discomfort and gloom, and at the cost of a small fortune, in obedience to an irrational custom, of which everybody complains, but from which nobody has the courage to emancipate himself. The English are a slow-moving people, and terribly afraid of violating any of the proprieties, but they have gradually awakened to the necessity for reform. A society has been organized, the members of which bind themselves to limit mourning to the heads of the family, except that the children may wear it for their parents, brothers or sisters. Servants are not to be clothed in black, and it is declared sufficient for men to wear a piece of black crape on the arm, or for women to have a black sash and trimmings.—The Graphic.

IT WAS a young woman with as many white flounces around her as the planet Saturn has rings. She gave the music-stool a whirl or two, and dutted down in it like a twirl of soap-suds in a hand basin. Then she pushed up her cuffs as if she was going to fight for the champion's belt. Then she worked her wrists and hands—to limber 'em, I suppose—and spread out her fingers until they looked as though they would pretty much cover the key-board from the growling end down to the little squeaky one. Then these two hands of her's made a jump at the keys as if they were a couple of tigers coming down upon a flock of black and white sheep, and the piano gave a great howl, as if its tail had been trod upon. Dead stop—so still you could hear your hair growing. Then another howl as if the cow had two tails, and you had trodden on both of 'em at once, and then a grand clatter and scramble and string of jumps, up and down, back and forward, one hand over the other like a stampede of rats and mice more than anything I call music.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

AN INCIDENT OF THE DETROIT TORNADO.—A News reporter met a little fellow toddling around with a woe-begone countenance which betokened the loss of all his earthly possessions, including his relatives, and curiosity prompted the reporter to question the boy concerning the cause of his grief. In reply the little fellow said:

"I wouldn't tare nossin' 'tall about it if the wind hadn't blowed my poor pussy away. When I see the winds tummin' I looked for my pussy and she was on the fence just a holdin' on, an' lookin' as cross and scaret like there was a big dog tummin'. Den dere was a big cloud of dust tum along and my pussy leggo, and went a sailin' off in de air like she had wings, and her tail was as big as my arm."

THE majesty of justice was fearfully sustained by Lord Eskgrove, the English judge, who, it is related, once sentenced a tailor for murdering a soldier, in these words: "And not only did you murder him, whereby he was bereaved of his life, but you did thrust or push or pierce or propel the lethal weapon through the belly-band of his regimental breeches, which were his majesty's."

CURIOSITY about trifles is a mark of a little mind.

Religious Intelligence.

—Dr. John Cumming has announced that he intends delivering some lectures on "Mr. Moody and his place in prophecy."

—Rev. William Arthur, of England, was in too feeble health to visit the Irish Conference at its recent session. He could not converse with his friends, and was then "just removing where he could get dry mountain air."

—Mr. Hammond, the revivalist, has been conducting a series of successful meetings at Portland, Ore. At least five hundred persons have expressed a determination to follow the Savior. Mr. Hammond was assisted a portion of the time by Gen. O. O. Howard.

—A convention of "Broad Churchmen" or Liberal Christians was held at Geneva Lake, Wis., June 24 to 28. The subject of Christian or religious union was kept in prominent view. A correspondent of the Advance expresses high approval of the spirit of the meeting. It is proposed to make the conference yearly.

—The will of the late Robert H. Ives, of Providence, R. I., gives a bequest of $9,000 to the Protestant Episcopal Board of Missions, one of $10,000 to the trustees of the Church of the Redeemer in Providence as a fund for the support of the rector, conditional that the church shall not become a ritualistic one, $5,000 to the present rector, and $500 to Bishop Clark.

—Spanish-speaking preachers are in demand and are likely to be in increasing demand—for Brazil, the Argentine Republic, Central America and Mexico. No better service can at this time be rendered for the promotion of the temporal and spiritual interests of those countries than by furnishing them at their great centers with American Protestant missionaries.

—The missionary meeting of the United Methodist Free Churches was held in London, April 25. The committee reported the year's receipts at home to have been £11,119 12s. 5d.—increase from last year, £1,617 7s. 11d.; expenditures, £10,397 13s. 5d.; number of members on the foreign stations, 6,112—increase, 224—with 545 probationers; total members on foreign stations and home circuits, 87,371, with 6,195 probationers.

—The Rev. J. L. Green, of Tahiti, in November last, paid a visit to Ruruta, in response to an invitation from the King, at the request of the pastor and people, to dedicate a new church, 97 feet long, 42 feet wide, with walls 26 feet high, built entirely by the natives. In addition to all their labor they have spent about $800 for foreign material for the building. There were 580 persons in attendance on the occasion of the dedication.

—The will of the late Orrin Sage, of Ware, gives $20,000 to Williams College; $10,000 to the American Board; $5,000 each to the American Home Missionary Society and the American Missionary Association; $5,000 to the Congregational Society at Blandford, Mr. Sage's former home, for a ministerial fund; $5,000 to the society at East Ware for a parsonage; $1,000 each to Hamilton Normal Institute and Mount Holyoke Seminary.

—At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, held April 12, Sir Henry Rawlinson declared that the loss of the lamented Rev. Charles New was a very great one, not only to the Geographical Society, of which he was a distinguished member, but to the cause of Christianity. High tributes to his memory were also paid at the same meeting by Col. Grant, Mr. Hutchinson, secretary to the Church Missionary Society, and other gentlemen.

—A special feature of the commencement of Bethany College (Disciples of Christ,) Kentucky, was the unveiling of a bust of Alexander Campbell, made by J. T. Hart, and presented to the college by Mrs. Campbell. The speech of presentation was made by the Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, and an appropriate reply was made by President Pendleton. Mr. Campbell was the first president of this college, and Mr. Pendleton is his immediate successor.

—"John Calvin not ordained!" Dr. Philip Schaff, in the April number of the Princeton Quarterly Review, pronounces an elaborate eulogy upon the character of John Calvin. Dr. Schaff says Calvin was never ordained to the ministry, "but he had an extraordinary call, like that of the prophets of old, and the apostle of the Gentiles. This was felt by his brethren, and about a year after his conversion he was the acknowledged leader of the Protestant party in France."

—The United Presbyterian notices the death of the Rev. Elijah McCoy as substantially ending the history of a small but remarkable denomination. It was called the "Dissenting Presbyterians," or "Warwickites," and was particularly opposed to the "Covenanter," "Seceder" and "Associate Reformed" heresies. At a meeting of the presbytery, about twenty-five years ago, the denomination had but one minister. Mr. McCoy was one of the two young men who were ordained at that time. He had long been the only minister.

—Our exchanges for the week ending May 29, says the Independent, chronicle 4,450 conversions or accessions to the churches—generally by profession and as the result of revivals—as follows: Baptist 1,915; Methodist, 1,059; Congregational, 662; Reformed, 339; Presbyterian, 309; Christian, 91; United Brethren, 30; Lutheran, 36; unclassified, 19. Prominent among Baptist revivals have been those at Canton, Ill., resulting in accessions of more than 150; and at Bethel, Penn., resulting in 70 accessions. There have been extensive Methodist revivals at Lynchburg, Va.—more than 300 conversions; Virginia City, Montana circuit, 200 accessions; St. Joseph, Mo., 122 conversions; Atlanta, Ga., 80 conversions; Pascagoula, Miss., 40 conversions.

Lighting up the darkened parlor
Like a shower of golden rain.

Baby May, her white hands softly
Folded in her mute surprise,
Sat upright upon the carpet—
Baby wonder in her eyes.

Soon the little hands unloosing,
Each essayed the toy in grasp,
But in vain—no shining substance
Found she in their tightest clasp.

Down she went upon the carpet,
Creeping softly round and round,
Making eager, restless movements,
And a cooing, baby sound.

Reaching now, and now bewildered
By her shining, new-found prize—
All the while the baby wonder
Beaming in her violet eyes.

Wearied with her vain endeavor,
Both the dimpled hands grew still,
But the bright eyes watched the sunbeams
Flitting here and there at will.

Watched them as they danced about her,
Lighting up the carpet gray;
Then she softly stooped and—kissed them!
Darling, precious Baby May!

Letter from a Chinese Girl.

MR. EDITOR: I send you a letter from the young girl, a student in Bro. Lambuth's school, Shanghai, China. The original one I have in beautiful characters on green and red paper, most finely written without a blemish, the translation of which is from Mrs. Lambuth. You can put the letter in the Child's Corner if you think it of any use.

Respectfully yours,

S. B. THOMAS.

TRANSLATION OF SUSAN B. THOMAS' LETTER TO MRS. S. B. THOMAS.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, April 16, 1875.

MY DEAR MRS. THOMAS: I am glad to have the opportunity of writing to you, and send by Mrs. Lambuth. I hope you have been well all along. I hope, too, that our heavenly Father has ever blessed you with good health. Through God's mercy I was given the choice of entering the school, where I am taught about God and my Savior.

Mrs. Lambuth has been very kind to me, and has taught me how to work with needles, as well as to do many other things. My studies at present are the Acts of the Apostles; memorized also geography, arithmetic, reading, and the "Lung Nyou," beside many other kind of books.

I am greatly obliged to you for your kindness in sending money to support me, and thus lead me into the path of righteousness. I hope you will ever remember me in your prayers to God. Pray that he will have compassion and forgive my sins, and that he will send down his Holy Spirit, and that I may live according to his words and commands.

I hope you will write me, for I shall be very glad to get your letter.

Ever yours most gratefully,

WONG BAY YUNG, or
SUSAN B. THOMAS.

From Our Little Friends.

JACKSON, LA., July 23, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My name is Mary Alice Perry. I am seven and going on eight. I can read in the third reader and in the Grandpa Goodale stories in the ADVOCATE. I can spell too, though I never went to a spelling match in all my life. I can speak a piece called Bobolink, and can sing: "I want to be an angel." I saw a nest, the other day, in a bay tree, and it made me think of Barney, and wish he was here to show me how to milk it. I write this to ask you to ask Grandpa Goodale how he did it. We are all well. So good-by.

MARY ALICE PERRY.

The Little Substitute.

Several years ago, when I was a teacher in a school at ——, I had occasion to reprove a pupil for his inattention and disobedience. My words failing to produce an effect upon him, I was obliged to resort to punishment, and accordingly I called him up, and commanded him to stand for a quarter of an hour in a corner of the school-room.

As he was going there a little boy, much younger than the guilty one, came to me and requested that I would allow him to take the place of the lad who had offended. This request astonished me a good deal; however, I was not inclined to put any question to the child, and contented myself with observing to him that if I granted his request he should pass the whole of the time in the corner; "and," added I, "a quarter of an hour is very long when one must spend it in punishment." These words did not shake him. I then pointed out to him the disgrace which attaches to a child who undergoes punishment, telling him that in the eyes of all the visitors who might enter the school he would appear a naughty and unruly child. Nothing, however, changed his purpose. He still persevered in his resolution. I then allowed him to take his companion's place in the corner.

I was deeply moved, and I silently prayed to the Lord to give me a little of that wisdom which cometh from above, in order to draw from this incident some instruction which might be profitable to the souls of the children who were confided to me.

When the quarter of an hour was expired I released the little boy, and asked him if it was his companion who induced him to take his place.

"No, sir," he replied.

"Do you not think that he deserved to be punished?"

"O," said he, "he deserved it well."

"What, then, is the motive which has led you to bear this punishment in his place?"

"Sir, it is because I love him."

What a touching reply! The other children had listened with deep attention to this conversation. I then called the disobedient boy, and ordered him to go in his turn into the corner. At these words there was a clamor of protestations. A multitude of little voices cried out at the same time: "O, sir, that would not be right—that would not be right"—"nor just either," added one of the boldest.

"Why would it not be just?" replied I, thinking to disconcert the boy who had thus expressed himself. "Has not your school-fellow disobeyed?"

"Yes, sir, but you have allowed Joseph to be punished in his place; you should not then, on that account, punish him."

My prayer, thought I, was heard; and I continued in these words: "Does what has just happened recall anything to your minds?"

"Yes, sir," said several voices; "it reminds us that the Lord Jesus bore the punishment of our sins."

"What name would you give to Joseph now?"

"That of substitute."

"What is a substitute?"

"One who takes the place of another."

"What place has Jesus taken?"

"That of sinners."

"Joseph has told us that he wished to take his school-fellow's place, and be punished instead of him, because he loved him. Can you tell me why Jesus wished to die in the place of sinners?"

"It was also because he loved us."

"Repeat a passage from the Bible which proves that."

"The Son of God who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Galatians ii, 20.

"You told me just now that it would not be right, nor even just, to put the naughty boy in the corner, after having punished Joseph in his place; what instruction may we draw from this?"

"We learn from it the assurance that God can never punish any sinner who believes in Jesus Christ as his Savior;" "and," added quite a little boy, "he will never do so; for the Bible tells us that 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son,' in order that 'whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"—John iii, 16.—The Christian.

Couldn't Stop.

This is the way a great many boys get into difficulty—"they get a-going and they can't stop." The boy that tells lies began at first to stretch the truth a little—to tell a large story—till he came out a full-grown liar!

Two boys began by bantering each other, till they got a-going and couldn't stop. They separated with black eyes and bloody noses!

Did you hear about the young man stealing from his master's drawer? He came from the country a promising boy. But the rest of the clerks went to the theater and smoked, and he thought he must do so too. He began thinking he would try it once or twice. He got a-going and couldn't stop. He could not resist the temptation when he knew there was money in the drawer. He got a-going—he will stop in prison.

Some young men were, some years ago, in the habit of meeting together in a room at the public house to "enjoy themselves"—to drink and smoke. One of them, as he was going there one evening, began to think there might be danger in the way. He stopped and considered a moment, and then said to himself: "Right about face!" He dropped his cigar, went back to his room, and was never seen at the public house again. Six of the young men followed his example. The rest got a-going, and could not stop till they landed, most of them, in a drunkard's grave. Beware, boys, of the first cigar or chew of tobacco. Be sure, before you start, that you are in the right way, for when you are going down hill it is hard to stop!

One night a miller was awakened by his camel trying to get his nose into the tent.

"It is very cold out here," said the camel. "I only want to put my nose in."

The miller made no objections.

Soon the camel asked leave to have his neck in, then his feet, and, meeting with no opposition from his master, he soon had his whole body in. This was very disagreeable to the miller, who complained of the camel's conduct.

"If you don't like it you can go," answered the camel; "as for me, I have got possession, and I shall stay; you can't get rid of me now."

Boys, this ugly camel represents the evil habits and little sins which, if not continually watched, creep into your lives unawares. The dram, the quid, the cigar, get hold of a boy or a young man, and say to him: "You can't get rid of me."

CAN YOU FIND HIM?—"What book is that?" inquired a merchant of a youth from the country, who, while searching his bag for a letter of recommendation, had let a book fall on the floor.

"My Bible, sir."

"Your Bible! What are you going to do with your Bible here in the city?"

"Read it, sir. I promised my mother I would read it every day; and I shall do it, sir!"

The firm tone and flashing eye told the merchant that he had a boy of principle and grit before him. He felt that a boy who loved his Bible after this fashion could be trusted. He hired him, found him true and trusty, kept him many years as a clerk, and finally made him his partner.

In this fact you see a merchant taking it for granted that a boy who loved his Bible after this fashion could be trusted. He was right. Mark the point, and tell me if you can find a Bible-hating boy who can be trusted. Isn't it a fact that boys who hate the Bible are not trustworthy? If, therefore, you wish to be true, trusty and trusted, you must love your Bible. With the Bible as the rule and guide of your life, every duty will be performed in a manner well pleasing to God, and of necessity well pleasing to men.—Sunday School Messenger.

After the Meeting.

It should be the study and aim of those who enjoyed the great privilege to treasure up its lessons and to prolong every gracious impression. Many may have left unconverted, but with strong convictions, and with an earnest purpose to lead a new life, and to seek the pearl of great price. These impressions may be easily dissipated by worldly influences, and by the wiles of the devil, unless followed up by prayer, and by an immediate union with the church. An open and bold confession of Christ, and the diligent use of all means, can alone bring these resolves to the practical result of conversion and a steadfast religious life. Some doubtless went away sorrowful, but with the purpose of postponing for a time their acceptance of Christ. God help them to reconsider this insane determination, and to yield to the strivings of the Spirit! May the Holy Spirit follow all convicted souls to their homes, to their business, and bring them, as the after fruits, to the Savior of sinners!

The young converts have gone from this atmosphere of devotion, and from the helpful influences which were about them, to the common conditions of life. Some of these conversions were with demonstration; the most were quiet. Christ gave them rest. They found peace, and have gone away with the comfortable assurance of sins forgiven. Some of them were advanced in years, but the most were young people. Let them take heed and walk in Christ even as they have received him. In the experience meetings and also in the sermons strong testimonies were delivered against the evils of dancing and some other popular amusements. Whatever these are to worldly people, they are in the way of the Christian's life and safety. They are hinderances to spirituality and holiness, and must be regarded as things entirely out of the question with those who are intent on saving their souls. Henceforth the young convert is not of the world—he is a citizen of heaven. Let him not sell his birthright for a morsel of meat. Go to work in the church, keep up family and private prayer, and henceforth live among God's people, and abide in the house of the Lord. Grow in grace, grow in the knowledge of Christ, and stretch onward and upward in the heavenly race.

To the children of God the meeting was a feast in many ways. They were here from distant and widely separated sections. A fraternal camp meeting it has been from the beginning—not a forced endeavor to bring uncongenial elements together, but the gravitation of kindred spirits to this center of devotion and fellowship. We gathered from the uttered experiences of believers these lessons among others: Nearly all were conscious of decided spiritual influences in their childhood, and were converted in their youth. The time and place were known to many—perhaps to a majority of those testifying—but a considerable number of most exemplary Christians, rejoicing in assurance of their present acceptance, could give neither date nor locality. Both classes seemed to be equally zealous and useful, and, so far as we could discover, there was no difference in the intelligence and mental characteristics. This diversity of experience exists among us, while all insist upon the present witness of the Spirit and the adoption of sons.

The subject of Christian perfection was considerably exhibited in the experience meetings. Several testified to its realization in their own experience. There was, however, the usual divergence of view. This was manifest in the preaching and in the experiences related. Some held that there is a residue of sin remaining after regeneration, and that Christian perfection is a second and distinct work, with its own proper witness in the consciousness of the believer. For this there were some very strong testimonies by ministers and laymen. Others were quite explicit in rejecting the residue theory and the special and distinct work after regeneration, resolving perfection into the positive aspect of growth and maturity in the elements and graces of the new life. Books have been written on this subject pro and con, and much controversy—sometimes sadly bitter—has grown out of it. Methodist experience has long had this jar and discord at its very heart. Our present study is in connection with the meeting. The character of the witnesses was perhaps equally good—the one class were as intelligent and spiritually-minded as the other. We hope both were equally tolerant. Is this conflict only seeming, and merely a different way of apprehending and defining the same experience? There may be different ways of defining and stating the same experience, but which class has the right statement? There was too much love, too much of the melting power of the Holy Spirit to allow these differences to mar the meeting. There were, however, these apparent divergencies in the matters of conversion and of sanctification. We must herein be careful, tolerant, and be sure that we have love and its fruits. "The Spirit itself helpeth our infirmities." May he help God's children herein to "be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace."

Great and special blessings were received by the children of God. It was to them a perpetual love-feast, and they drank deeply of the rivers of grace. The river, whose streams make glad the city of God, was bank full, and flowing through the encampment day and night. Many will remember the place as Jacob remembered the brook Jabbok, others as Naaman remembered the spot in Jordan where he was healed. Such meetings are worth a thousand times their cost in the communion of saints, and the quickening and deepening of the religious life in believers.

So much good preaching!—having gifts differing, and all excellent. Some fault-finding, as there will be always, and with the best intentions. But every sermon suited the case of somebody; some were too long, mc judice, but other hearers would not have had them a whit shorter, and there were people from out-of-the-way places, gospel hungry, and feeding upon every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. At such meetings there are many drawn thither who hear no preaching elsewhere. It is important, therefore, that there should be abundance of it, and of the best sort. We can hardly recall one-half of the good sermons, but every one has left an impression that will be recollected, and that will appear some day. Our pulpit is wonderfully rich in variety, in gifts, in power.

As at all revival meetings, some were left at the altar, and Christ not found. Let prayers go up for them. If in earnest, and truly penitent, they will find. God help all wounded and stricken ones not healed to come to the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. There is balm in Gilead and a physician there.

Here on the seashore we pen these meditations—recollections of the great supper we have had. All is comparatively still and solitary. The wavelets are singing along the strand, the heavens are clear and serene, the grounds are checkered with sunshine and shade, but the tide of song, the shout of joy, the faces of those dear to us in Christ, linger in our thoughts. Where the patriarch saw the mystic ladder, and had his dream of glory, it was always Bethel. This place to thousands will always be as the house of God, as the gate of heaven.

Practical Calvinism.

Under this heading the Christian Observer of Louisville refers to a statement made not by the Southwestern but by the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Observer says:

"If we are correctly informed, Moody, Whittle, Hammond, Earle, Smith, and nearly all the most noted evangelists of the day, are Calvinistic." This statement is from the Southwestern Christian Advocate, which might have included the majority of the great evangelists of past days—Baker, Nettleton, the Tennents, Edwards, Whitefield, Knox, Cranmer, and the English Reformers, Calvin, Luther—down to Peter and Paul. The statement is a suggestive one. The more earnest and the more successful a man is in converting sinners the more clearly, it would appear, he sees that the conversion of sinners is the work of God alone, and not of man at all; that much more is to be hoped for from God's grace than from man's free agency. When Moody and Sankey entered London Calvinistic views of the grace of God were all that could have sustained them. They had no arguments to present that had not been often presented by ministers whom the citizens of London respected and revered. They had no new means of influencing the "self-determining power" of the London will. But they depended on the power of God, and God owned and blessed their labors. They succeeded as Calvinists, because they made more of the power of God than of "the freedom of the will." And every successful evangelist is practically a Calvinist, whatever he may be theoretically. As long as the dependence is on eloquent sermons, touching prayers, elegant music—in a word, on the human element of divine worship—God seldom owns the service; but, when the whole dependence is upon him, God uses it as a means of converting sinners. It is a significant fact in this connection that many of the most successful revivalists are, like Moody, Whittle and Hammond, men of merely ordinary talents and attainments.

Our statement was made in connection with an extract from a communication in the Western Methodist, in which some exceptions were taken by the writer to some of Mr. Whittle's teachings on religious experience. We do not think that Mr. Whittle or any of these revivalists mentioned have preached on the subjects of election and reprobation, nor have they had much to say against free grace, human freedom and an unlimited atonement. The Observer believes their success due to Calvinism—practical Calvinism. We believe, on the other hand, that it is due to the great truths which distinguish Arminianism, and to those vital doctrines which Calvinists and Arminians hold in common. There was plenty of Calvinism in Scotland, Ireland and England before Moody and Sankey went there. To account for their success we must suppose that they took something besides Calvinism with them. We accord all honor to the Calvinistic revivalists, but it must not be forgotten that there have been Arminians who have been noted on the same field, and that Arminian preachers are annually winning tens of thousands of souls to Christ. Wesley was instrumental in saving many souls, but his sermon on free grace exhibits his views in reference to the power of God and the freedom of man. To us Paul and Peter are both good Arminians; to our brother of the Observer they are Calvinists. Nevertheless, may we all be one in Christ, preach a full and free salvation to all, and stand together against the world, the flesh and the devil.

To the Members of the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama Conferences.

Dear Brethren: The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, at its annual meeting held July 22, at Seashore camp ground, appointed me to express to you their gratification at the business management and editorial conduct of the paper for the last year, and to ask of you a more vigorous effort to enlarge the circulation as a means of general usefulness throughout the boundaries of the several Conferences.

It is already known to you that the three Annual Conferences which are represented in the committee are not merely the special patrons, but the actual joint owners of the Advocate, and that Rev. R. J. Harp has for several years been under contract to publish it for them.

With this contract, after carefully reviewing it, the committee continue to be satisfied, because with a small capital (about $1,000) it secures an excellent family paper, a good church organ, and the introduction of Methodist doctrines and usages into circles not to be reached by other means.

That Bro. Harp desires not simply to fill his contract, but to make the Advocate a first-class religious newspaper, is seen from the promptness and kindness of the business office, the punctuality of mailing, the superior quality of the ink and paper, the clearness of the type, the accuracy of composition, the freedom from offensive advertisements, and the uniform neatness of its appearance. In these respects it is believed your Advocate is inferior to none in the land.

With the editorial conduct of Rev. L. Parker, D. D., your committee is equally well pleased. His themes are opportune. Sound in doctrine and pure in sentiment, his discussions are clear, serious and spiritually profitable.

The selections on religious subjects are of the same style. Those on scientific subjects are instructive and entertaining. The News of the Week is expurgated of all vicious elements—nothing degrading to morals is admitted. The occasional contributions, made for the most part by the preachers, add great interest to the paper, and show that while the editor invites free discussion, he yet is careful to prevent excess of liberty, and would refuse to let the Advocate become a vehicle of vituperation and wrangling.

It is due to the publisher and editor to add that the present circulation—more than eight thousand—is nearly if not quite equal to that of any weekly published in the land, and that by reason of the new and improved steam press, and other conveniences lately purchased and put into the work-rooms, if the circulation were doubled or tripled there would be but a small increase of labor and expense, and the publication would be as prompt as heretofore.

Now why may not this be done, and done very soon? Should not the Advocate be in every family and college and hospital and asylum in our bounds? And can it not be put there by the efforts of the preachers? We need only remind you, brethren, that while the word spoken is powerful, the word printed is hardly less so; that while the overflowings of the pulpit are great, the overflowings of the press perhaps are greater. Centuries ago God joined together these two forms of power, and the history of the church shows plainly that they must work together if the highest success in saving souls be reached.

Respectfully yours in Christ,

J. W. Rush,
For the Committee.

Episcopal Decision Upon the Restoration of an Expelled Member.

1. The name of Logan D. Dameron having been reported by the pastor of Chateau Avenue charge as superintendent of its Sabbath school, and as a member of this District Conference, the Rev. J. W. Lewis, pastor of St. John's church, challenged the right of the said Dameron to membership in the District Conference, now convened, upon the ground that he was an expelled member from the St. John's church, and that his legal status as such was unchanged up to the present time; and appealed to the presiding Bishop to determine whether the said Dameron could be recognized as a member of the church or as a member of this District Conference.

2. The question having been raised by Rev. W. M. Williams whether the president of a District Conference had the right to determine its membership, the chair decided that the church placed that responsibility upon the presiding officer.

3. The facts were then agreed upon by the presiding elder and the pastors of the Chateau Avenue and the St. John's charges, upon which the decision of the presiding Bishop is asked, to be, viz.:

1. That Logan D. Dameron was expelled from the St. John's church on the twenty-seventh of November, 1874.

2. That he gave notice of an appeal to the ensuing Quarterly Conference, to convene on the nineteenth of December, 1874.

3. That before the meeting of the Quarterly Conference he, upon application, was received in Chateau Avenue church by its pastor, the Rev. F. A. Owen, on the thirteenth of December, 1874, with the expressed consent and approval of the membership of said church; that he was subsequently elected to the offices of church secretary and Sabbath school superintendent, and is now reported as a member of the District Conference here convened (the tenth of June, 1875) from that charge.

4. That the presiding elder read to the preacher in charge of Chateau Avenue a written argument against his having received the said Dameron into his church without Dameron's having first given satisfaction to the society which had expelled him.

5. That the said Dameron has not at any time since his expulsion made application to the Quarterly Conference of the St. John's church for a renewal of its church censure.

I. Upon the question submitted, viz.: whether the said Logan D. Dameron can be recognized as a member of the church, and therefore as a member of this District Conference, from the Chateau Avenue church, the president decides:

(1.) That an expelled member continues under church censure until that censure has been properly removed.

(2.) That he cannot be recognized again as a church member until then.

(3.) That a preacher in charge may not revise the action of a committee of trial or of a Quarterly Conference so as to relieve an expelled member from censure.

(4.) The censure of expulsion, when completed, can only be removed by the same body that put it on, and by the same society. (See Discipline, page 152, p. 5, and Discipline, page 148, p. 5, and Manual of the Discipline, page 77, p. 4.)

2. The church only holds herself responsible for her agents in that and to the extent for which they are accredited as such. A board of stewards, for instance, may not license a preacher, a Quarterly Conference may not elect to orders, a presiding elder may not ordain. In all three supposed cases the church would not confirm the action of those who only assume to be her agents.

3. The church has not constituted the preacher in charge her agent for removing censure from an expelled member, but the Quarterly Conference of the society that expelled him, as the preacher was not her agent in placing it upon him. When an expelled member shall have been restored by the Quarterly Conference the pastor reports to the church his restoration and the grounds thereof (see Manual, page 77,) and a certificate of membership is necessary to the restored member from the pastor of said society before he can be received as a member by any other.

4. It will be noticed that the Discipline makes a difference between the reception of a member and the restoration of a member. Of the former the preacher is the sole judge. By not keeping this distinction clearly before the mind, I gave a letter of advice in answer to a letter of the presiding elder some time after the preacher in charge of Chateau Avenue enrolled the name of Mr. Dameron as a member, in which I stated informally that a preacher in charge of any society might receive an expelled member into the church upon confession and the consent of the brethren; but this view was immature, and is not sustained by the Discipline or the Manual. Such a course would be the vain attempt to confirm one set of agents at the expense of another set of agents—to hold up the dignity of one society at the expense of another. This might do in a congregational system, but would soon prove fatal to the authority and existence of a connectional system like our own, in which the disciplinary action of one society must be respected and maintained by the discipline of the whole church.

In accordance with these views the presiding Bishop decides that Logan D. Dameron cannot be recognized as a member of this Conference, because his legal status as an expelled member of the church has not been changed by any church action which may have transpired in his case since the date of his expulsion from the St. John's church, on November 27, 1874.

J. C. Keener.

Manchester Church, June 11, 1875.

A Church for San Francisco.

How the good news thrills our finger-ends as we write! After years of waiting and anxiety, to-day the Southern Methodist Church has attained property of value and prominence in this city. A splendid house in a good location is ours. The Columbia Square Baptist church, having concluded to consolidate with the Tabernacle Baptist church for the purpose of building a grand temple on Fifth street, abandoned their church near Columbia Square, and have sold it to our congregation on such terms as enable us to buy without embarrassment. The building is Gothic in style of architecture and presents a magnificent appearance. It is spacious, covering a lot 65x100 feet in size. It is well built, with the most approved modern arrangements. The basement is all above ground, consisting of a large lecture room, two class-rooms, closets and store-rooms, and heating apparatus of the best pattern. The upper floor consists of an auditorium 53½x62½ feet, with sittings for six hundred, without the gallery, which can be arranged for two hundred more. The pastor's study and choir gallery are in the rear of the pulpit. The auditorium is fitted up in fine style—carpets, upholstered pews, etc. Altogether we have one of the best churches in the city. There are improvements which we desire to make which, when finished, will add much to the comfort and beauty of the house.

Rev. W. J. Mahon, pastor of the church, will visit our friends in the country who have so kindly offered to assist us. He will endeavor to raise a few thousand dollars, and we hope to redeem the church before Conference, entirely free from debt. We will then occupy a position which perhaps no church of any importance in this city now enjoys—a large and elegant house, free from debt! Laus Deo!—Pacific Methodist, July 16.

Bishop Paine sends us, says the Western Methodist, this brief note. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved family.

Our beautiful little grandchild, Mary Eliza, only daughter of J. B. and Mary W. Wendel, died at my residence in Aberdeen, July 19, 1875, aged one year and twenty days. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

R. Paine.

The General Conference of the Evangelical Association (Albright Methodists) meets in Philadelphia, October 14. The meetings are quadrennial, and it is proposed to extend the intervals between the meetings to five years.

At Seashore.

The editor at this writing still lingers at the Seashore camp ground. We are indebted to the kindness of generous friends for the gift of a very convenient tent—it might be more appropriately styled a cottage—very commodious and well adapted for a few weeks' sojourn during the warm weather. Many thanks to the donors. It is the only roof we have ever been under that we could call our own. The sensation is a novel one, and we must have a week or two at least to enjoy it, and to realize, in our measure, how fortunate people feel who live in their own houses, and have a place which they may call their home.

A dozen families or more have remained thus far, and we have a quiet community—indeed rather a sleepy-one. The forest shade and the sea breeze induce a drowsiness and a dreamy indifference to all mundane affairs. The Lotus-Eaters were not more tranquil. It is like an atmosphere redolent of the bloom of poppies. We have not been here long enough yet to tell whether the soporific influences pass away after a time. Old seashore sojourners inform us that they do.

The first Sunday after the camp meeting we had two sermons and a congregation of over a hundred. Last Sunday one sermon and a remembrance of the week of prayer. Very still it seems since the throngs of camp meeting have passed away, and since the most of the cottages have become vacant and solitary. The more active of our community spend their time in bathing, crabbing, fishing and reading. The evenings are devoted to social intercourse, singing and strolling along the beach, where the waves ripple and where the stars can be seen as they look down into the sea.

The great tabernacle in which twelve hundred people were comfortably seated, and where many grand sermons were heard, and a gust of song as the sound of many waters went up almost without ceasing, is now silent. The altar rail about which so many penitents have knelt, and where hundreds altogether have found salvation, seems almost sacred to us as we pass it. Many will return from year to year to kneel again at the spot where God's face shone upon them.

Restoration to Membership of an Expelled Member.—We insert this week the text of the episcopal decision made at the St. Louis District Conference, in June last, by the presiding Bishop.

An expelled member of the St. John's church was reported by the pastor of the Chateau Avenue church as a member of the District Conference. His membership was challenged by the preacher in charge of the St. John's church, and upon this the decision was made.

It has been freely commented upon, but for some reason the text has not as yet been published by the commentators.

It is, of course, subject to the revision of the College of Bishops, in common with all episcopal decisions.

A note from Sister Kavanaugh informs us that the Bishop and herself expect to leave for California between the sixteenth and twenty-third instant. We sincerely pray that a good Providence may attend them in their long journey, and that their visit to the Pacific Conferences may be attended by the presence and power of their divine Master. The Bishop and his estimable wife will be heartily welcomed by the churches in California and Oregon.

We have received the annual catalogue of Randolph Macon College. A glance at its pages shows this old institution to be enjoying a good degree of prosperity. We refer our readers to the advertisement in another column. Randolph Macon is in the front rank of our institutions of learning. Its faculty is composed of men of rare ability and large experience. We know of no better school under the control of Southern Methodism.

Rev. Samuel C. Feemster, editor of the Christian Republic, Columbus, Miss., died in peaceful triumph on July 16, 1875. The brother of the late editor, Rev. P. S. Feemster, assumes the editorial conduct of the paper. Exchanges and correspondence to be addressed to "Christian Republic, Home P. O., Green county, East Tennessee."

The British Wesleyan Conference Plan of Services, printed and sent out to preachers and circuits a week previous to the session, includes this year four hundred appointments. They are not only for the larger places, but also for the smaller ones in the vicinity of the Conference. Forty ministers are to conduct open-air services.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been invited by the Round Lake Camp Meeting Association to hold a ten days' meeting on their camp ground in September next.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S farewell meeting took place a few weeks ago. The Earls of Shaftesbury and Cavan, Samuel Morley, M. P., the Right Hon. Cowper Temple, Mr. Macarthur and seven hundred clergymen were present. Speeches were made full of praise of the eminent revivalists, for the fresh life and energy they had introduced in churches, and the steadfastness of their converts. A suggestion was made that a memorial present be presented to Messrs. Moody and Sankey; but Mr. Stone, on their behalf, said it would not be accepted, and nothing would give them more pain than such a step. Of the seven hundred clergymen present, fifty-eight were of the Church of England, far outnumbering those of any other denomination. Canon Conway, of Westminster, occupied a seat on the platform. All present were deeply affected. Moody, while speaking, was so overcome by emotion that he had to stop, and was unable to conclude his address. Of the number of meetings held by these great evangelists in London, during the past four months, and of the aggregate attendance, the following is a summary: Camberwell, 60 meetings, attended by 480,000 people; Victoria, 45 meetings, attended by 40,000; in the Opera House, 60 meetings, attended by 330,000; in Bow, 60 meetings, attended by 600,000; and in Agricultural Hall, 60 meetings, attended by 720,000. $140,000 have been expended for buildings, printing, stewards, etc., but for their services Messrs. Moody and Sankey decline to receive a penny.

THE approaching Old Catholic Conference will open at Bonn on August 15, continue about three days, and be followed by the Old Catholic Congress at Breslau, August 20–22. The Conference will consist of members of the Old Catholic movement, of the orthodox churches of Russia and Greece, and of the Church of England, and will be similar in its purposes to that at Bonn last year. The main aim will be to prepare the way for agreement upon the principal dogmas of the bodies represented and their consequent recognition of one another. During July and August Bishop Reinkens is to hold seven confirmations in the Palatinate, and visit the congregations in Westphalia and Baden.

THE Advance says that "among the elements of Mr. Moody's success we have nowhere seen mentioned the fact that he has a most worthy helpmate. Mrs. Moody is with him in England. She used to accompany him to the army in his Christian Commission work. That her faith is not a whit behind his has often been attested. In a private letter we have been permitted to see she writes that the passage home has been engaged upon the steamship Spain; that they plan to go directly from New York to Mr. Moody's mother's home in Massachusetts for a two months' rest, and that then they turn their faces toward Chicago."

AT THE recent session of the Irish Conference Rev. Gervase Smith, of England, made the following statement: "There are fourteen millions of Methodists in the world. With respect to the work of Methodism in London, twelve years ago there were only thirty-seven thousand sittings in that great city of four millions of inhabitants, and now there are ninety-one thousand, and in that time forty-four large chapels had been erected, capable of seating more than one thousand each."

DISPATCHES from Santander, Spain, intimate that the recent detention of Protestant books by the custom officials at that place is part of a scheme to compel active Protestants to leave Spain. An impression prevails that the Madrid government hopes to conciliate the papal nuncio and moderates by this underhand persecution, while apparently favoring and pursuing a liberal policy in regard to religious matters.

CARDINAL MCCLOSKEY sailed from New York for France, by the steamship Pereire, on August 7, and expects to arrive in Rome in time for the September convocation of the Sacred Consistory, when he will receive his red hat, and leave his "title" assigned to him. "The title," explains the Freeman's Journal, "means the church in Rome of which he is the cardinal."

WHY the Pope and the Romish clergy encourage pilgrimages to French and other centers of superstition is easily understood in view of the fact that in 1874 the Society of the Propaganda received 5,185,000 francs as its proportion of the net gains of the miserable swindles.

A FEW gentlemen breakfasting with Mr. Graham, formerly a member of Parliament, one day last week opened a subscription with $125,000 to build a Young Men's Christian Association hall in London.

THE Christian at Work says: With the same mail which brings us fiery paragraphs from European papers denouncing us for our sermon against spiritualism, and pamphlets of discourses preached against us in London and Edinburg because we do not believe in a "religion of ghosts," we receive announcement that the cause of the lamentation of the widow of our late President is spiritualism. We had heard from private sources, more than a year ago, that the unfortunate lady referred to was in Boston, consulting spirits, and were ready to hear of the dreadful result which has excited the sympathy of all our hearts. Go, ye spiritualists, to the lunatic asylum, and see another specimen of your miserable work; but keep your infernal doctrines out of your families. Let the Christian church more earnestly than ever set itself against modern spiritualism. It is of the devil first, last and always. Let us have none of it.

A MATERIALIZING spiritualistic medium in Boston has just come to grief. She was giving seances like "Katie King," and making money. One night there was an unusually large audience, and the exhibition was uncommonly startling. In the dim light forms emerged from the cabinet, and some of them were at once recognized by persons present as reanimations of dead relatives. At length the form of a child appeared in the doorway of the cabinet, and a woman said that she readily recognized it as her baby that had died a few weeks before. Then a young fellow, full of earthly realism, darted forward and grabbed the infantile form, and was promptly knocked down by the man who conducted the show. The investigator held fast to the baby, however, which, upon examination, proved to be made neither of flesh nor of bones, but to be materialized out of rags and a mask. The seances are now closed.

MR. HAMMOND closed his meetings at Portland, Ore., July 9. He is now holding meetings at Albany and Eugene City, in that State.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La.	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1874—From Canton, Miss.	2 00
June 14, 1875—From Selma, Ala.	5 00
Nov. 21, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Isney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La.	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss.	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

VERONA FEMALE COLLEGE.—Extracts from the Report of the Visiting Committee.—* * * On Tuesday, June 22, compositions were read by the members of the junior class. The subjects were well chosen, and they had the appearance of originality. They were read with an emphasis and distinctness of utterance not common on such occasions—evidence of good training.

On Wednesday the graduating exercises came off. Essays were read by ten young ladies, who acquitted themselves with much credit, and reflected honor upon their teachers and school. * * * All the other exercises to the close were entertaining and in good taste.

The committee desire to recommend this young institution to the favor and increased patronage of the public. The location, surroundings and varied facilities are unsurpassed in secure the great objects sought after. Dr. T. C. Wier, a worthy member of the North Mississippi Conference, is at its head. He is assisted by an able faculty for all the departments of the college. One of the chairs which we need not name, which is always best filled standing or running round, which is second to none in an institution like this, is filled with great skill and fidelity by the noble wife of the president. Sensible, discreet mothers, about to send their daughters to school, feel more concern in that direction than any other; and well they may. There the young, artless girl is to receive her home and domestic training, which is to render home a paradise, or otherwise, while life lasts. No knowledge of books, or fondness for fashion and display, can compensate for neglect here; and who so valuable as that presiding genius who has a place for everything, and everything in its place, to make her indelible impress upon these young minds and hearts? We were happy to find the moral and religious element prominent in the school. We have never met with a more orderly, healthy and happy-looking collection of young ladies anywhere. It was a real pleasure to contrast the plainness, neatness and economy visible in the college with some institutions we could name, in which extravagance, show, fashion and display seemed to have no limit or restraint. * * *

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thirty-five Acres or Eight?

A writer in the State Journal relates the following incident:

Some years since, when I was stopping at a house in Haywood county, N. C., I had some conversation with the proprietor. He told me that he had under cultivation in corn thirty-five acres, and said that he did not expect to obtain more than three hundred bushels. I observed that the greater portion of his land, though naturally fertile, was hilly, and had evidently been very imperfectly cultivated. After dinner we took a walk to look at a native grape vine. I found it near his stable, situated in a piece of bottom on the creek, of about eight acres. Some corn was looking well on the part near the stable, but four-fifths of the ground seemed chiefly covered by weeds. He said that the land was very rich, a large part of it inclined to be wet, and that having so much land, to tend he had not been able to work it enough to keep the weeds under, and that he had been obliged to give up the greater part of it. I said to him: "Suppose you were to cut a ditch through the center of it, and dry it, then throw your surplus manure from the stable on such parts as would derive most benefit from its application, have you any doubt but that this piece would yield you forty bushels to the acre?" He answered that he had no doubt of it. "Then," I added, "you would get more corn on this lot than you look for on your entire farm, and with perhaps not more than one-fourth of the labor; for as this land lies level and is free from stumps, etc., you could cultivate it with great ease. The rest of your land you might let stand in grass, with some small grain." Every acre of his land would produce fine crops of clover, orchard grass or timothy.

How to Know the Age of a Horse.—The colt is born with twelve grinders. When four front teeth have made their appearance the colt is twelve days old; and when the next four come forth it is four weeks old. When the corner teeth appear the colt is eight months old; and when the latter have attained the height of the front teeth it is one year old.

The two-year colt has the kernel—the dark substance in the middle of the tooth's crown—ground out of all the front teeth.

In the third year the middle front teeth are being shifted, and when three years old these are substituted for the horse teeth. The next four teeth are shifted in the fourth year, and the corner teeth in the fifth.

At six years the kernel is worn out of the middle front teeth, and the bridle teeth have attained their full growth.

At seven years a hook has been formed on the corner teeth of the upper jaw; the kernel of the teeth next to the middle front is worn out, and the bridle teeth begin to wear off.

At eight years of age the kernel is worn out of all the lower front teeth, and begins to decrease in the middle upper front.

In the ninth year the kernel has wholly disappeared from the upper middle front teeth. The hook on the corner teeth has increased in size as the bridle teeth lose their points.

In the tenth year the kernel has worn out of the teeth next to the middle fronts of the upper jaw; and in the eleventh year the kernel has entirely vanished from the corner teeth of the same jaw.

At twelve years old the crowns of all the front teeth in the lower jaw have become triangular, and the bridle teeth are much worn down. As the horse advances in age the gums shrink away from the teeth, which consequently receive a long narrow appearance, and their kernels have metamorphosed into a darkish point; gray hairs increase in the forehead, and the chin assumes the shape of an eagle.—Rural Sun.

Farmers' Notes.—Gen. Spinner writes as follows to Mr. Seth Green, the pisciculturist: "The time will come, if it is not already here, when the credit of having demonstrated that an acre of heretofore water waste is worth more for the production of wholesome food for man than an acre of the most fertile land will be awarded to you. Next winter I intend to fish in Florida waters, where I hope you will meet me with rod and line."

The place where an old wood-pile has been will very seldom produce anything for two or three years after being brought into cultivation, but will improve every year as the chips, etc., decay. Use quick lime freely to correct the tannic acid, also manure well with cotton seed and stable manure.

Mr. J. J. Conway, of Magnolia, Miss., planted a patch of Irish potatoes, thirty-eight by fifty-five feet—about the twenty-first part of an acre—on which he made seven and one-half flour barrels of fine potatoes, of the Peerless variety. Only think of this—over four hundred bushels to the acre!

The true policy in farming consists in raising our own corn, wheat, rye, oats, peas, hay, stock and meat. When a farmer has for himself, his family, his hands and his stock an abundance to eat, raised at home, when he does not need to purchase anything but groceries and clothing, he may depend upon it he is pursuing a better policy than the planter who raises cotton at a cost of ten or fifteen cents per pound, perhaps sells at a loss, and buys his corn at $1.50 per bushel, his meat at eighteen or twenty cents per pound, and has no flour but what he buys at the store, and all these things bought on a credit.—Farmer's Vindicator.

Egg Plants.—To have good egg plants the soil should be very rich and very warm. The plants may be set out two and a half to three feet apart, according to the richness of the soil. Most people set out too soon; the plants get a check from a night or two of cold, and will not produce the "fruit" so soon as good plants set out later. Of course, below us, egg plants are already set out, but in our part of the world, this season, at least, there will be few set out until the present month. In setting out the plants, much time will be saved if the plants can be kept from withering. The object should be to preserve all the foliage in the transplanted plants. If the leaves die off at transplanting, more will come out, but the plant receives a check, and it makes a difference of at least a couple of weeks in its producing fruit. Of course, after transplanting, they should be well watered, but in spite of this there will be a withering if the sun comes out very warm the next day. To prevent this, place a large flower-pot inverted over the plant during the middle of the day, for a day or two, taking it off, however, early in the afternoon. These pots are also useful to have handy to put over of a cold night, should any occur.—Maryland Farmer.

Protecting Trees and Shrubs. We have experienced great aid in the transplantation of trees and shrubs by covering over the circle of earth about the trunk with fresh grass, directly after a thorough artificial drenching or a sufficient rain. Especially is this true of trees and shrubs like the Magnolia, Rhododendron and Kalmia, which, unless a ball of earth is preserved about the roots, are difficult to transplant successfully.

Grass is at once a non-conductor of heat and a slow absorbent of moisture, particularly when green; so that while the parching heat of the sun's rays is, as it were, held upon the grass covering, the evaporation of the moisture underneath is retarded, and the action of capillary attraction checked. This grass protection should be renewed from time to time, as it grows old, compressed and decayed.

Its beneficial effects are very palpable upon young evergreens weakened by nurserymen's handling and delays, by the mutilation of root-fibers, and finally by the drying out and confinement which they undergo in the transit from the nursery to their destination.—E. S. Carman, in Rural New Yorker.

Successful Pear Culture.—L. & A. B. Rathbone, of Oakfield, Genesee county, N. Y., have furnished for this department the following facts relative to their experiment in cultivating pears: In the spring of 1864 they set out 4,000 dwarf pear trees, 3,000 Duchess, 500 Lonise Bonne de Jersey, 400 Beurre de Anjou, 100 Vicar of Winkfield. The trees are ten feet apart each way, occupying ten acres. The soil is a gravelly loam, mixed with sand, with clay subsoil. For five years the trees were severely pruned. The orchard has received medium cultivation, but no fertilizer, except that in June, 1873, it was dressed with about eighty bushels per acre of slaked lime and unleached wood ashes. Delivered in barrels at Batavia, and beginning with 1868, the several amounts received for annual sales for six successive years were as follows, and in the order named: $100, $230, $110, $1,338, $2,250, $5,530—total, $9,558. It will be noticed that in the last-named year (1873) the gross sales reached $553 per acre. Report of Department of Agriculture.

A New Potato Disease has made its appearance in England. The Cottage Gardener, London, describes it as a fungus which attacks the vine when not more than six inches high. The seed tuber dies and becomes a mass of rottenness; the young tubers are consequently arrested in their growth, and the haulm withers and decays. The disease has only been discovered in the gardens of the Royal Horticultural Society at Chiswick, and attacks only American varieties. This disease is similar to and possibly identical with a "potato blight" which sometimes, though rarely, attacks whole fields of potatoes in western New York under circumstances which give no definite idea as to its cause. It does not spread from one field to another, rarely reappears the second year, and spares some varieties in the same field while destroying others. We have found it worse on the Peachblow potato, but it rarely does much in a neighborhood, though individual farmers may suffer severely.

Tomato Catsup.—Boil till soft one peck of full ripe tomatoes, cut up into small pieces. Then strain through a sieve, leaving behind the skins and seed only. Take of mace, allspice and cloves each a tablespoonful; salt and red pepper to one's taste; tie up in a rag, and then place it in the strained tomatoes; then boil slowly till it thickens, stirring occasionally meanwhile. When thick remove from the fire, add one and a half teacups of strong vinegar, bottle closely, and lay bottles on the sides in a cool place. An onion cut up and tied in the bag of spices will please onion lovers.

Receipt for Fig Pickles.—Pluck ripe, but not full ripe figs, stems on. Put in a jar; sprinkle salt—one-half pound to a peck of fruit. Pour boiling water sufficient to cover figs, then let it stand twelve hours. Then drain in a colander. If too salt, rinse with fresh water. Fill jars with the fruit; on the figs pour hot, boiling vinegar, that has had added to it a pound of sugar to the gallon, and boiled. Put sticks of cinnamon and some cloves in the jar.

A Knowing Dog.—Madison Sleeper, of Exeter, N. H., has a dog. A few days ago the dog went with Mr. Sleeper's son to the woods, and returned with him. In the evening the boy needed his mittens, and, finding he had lost one, told where he had lost it, showing the other mitten. Suddenly the dog whined to go out and was let out. In about twenty minutes he returned with the lost mitten in his mouth, having gone a mile to the woods for it.

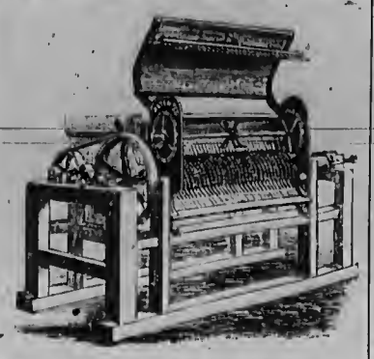
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added, it obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—An English gardener, who is cultivating Pinguiculas, is "bothered" to know, if Mr. Darwin's idea that this plant is an insect-eater is correct, why the plant does not feed on the Aphides which infest it? Mr. Darwin is of all men one of the most carefully correct in his facts, whatever may be said of his deductions, and it would be strange if he should be found wrong in regard to Pinguicula.

—The structure of coal has often been studied in sections sufficiently thin to be examined with the microscope. The presence of diatoms, however, has never been ascertained. But recently an Italian observer, Count Castracane, persuaded that diatoms must have existed at the time of formation of the coal, conceived the idea of examining microscopically the ashes of brown coal, instead of the sections hitherto used. In this way he has detected a large number of different species of diatoms in a coal that had been brought from Liverpool. Singularly, they belonged for the most part to fresh-water genera or species. Still the presence of some marine species proves that the strata in which the coal was formed were in more or less frequent communication with the sea.

—There are very few, we suspect, who have noticed the difference in the heat engendered by cast and by wrought iron stoves. And now, as shedding light on the subject, we are furnished with the results of investigations in this direction made and carried on by the French Academy. Rabbits were made to breathe the air passing over stoves of cast and wrought iron heated to redness, and afterward the blood of the animals was chemically examined, to ascertain the presence of carbonic oxide. The report states that the use of cast iron stoves, at a red heat, causes in the blood, by the presence of carbonic oxide, a gas eminently poisonous, changes whose repetition may become dangerous; while the same method of investigation has not revealed analogous effects from stoves of wrought iron. In summing up the results of the entire series of experiments the commission reports as follows: "The carbonic oxide, whose presence has been proved when stoves of cast iron are used, may arise from several different causes: 1. The permeability of the stove by that gas, which will pass from the interior of the fire-pot to the exterior. 2. The direct action of the oxygen of the air upon the carbon of the cast iron heated to redness. 3. The decomposition of carbonic acid contained in the air by its contact with metal heated to redness. 4. The influence of the organic dust naturally contained in the air." The commission recommend that all stoves and heating apparatus of cast iron, and even of wrought iron, be lined with fire brick, or other substance, so as to prevent their attaining a red heat. A suggestion to which we, on this side of the Atlantic, who depend so much upon stoves as a means of heating, will do well to give attention.

A Cow's Horn.—Pretty much all that we know of art and science has been derived from a careful study of nature, and of careful students Mr. Frank Buckland, the English naturalist, is one of the most faithful. Among the latest of the lessons he has read us is one on the structure of a cow's horn. "I find," he says, "that over the brain of the cow a strong roof of bone is thrown, in the shape of an arch, so as to form a substantial foundation for the horns. This roof is not solid, but is again strengthened below by a series of bony arches, that are so distributed as to form a series of hollow chambers, thus forming a structure uniting strength with lightness. The problem now is how to fasten the horn on each side on to this buttress. The horn itself must of course be formed of horn proper—i. e., hardened hair. In the rhinoceros we find a horn composed entirely of a solid mass of what is really a bunch of hair agglutinated together; but this kind of horn would have been much too heavy for the cow's convenient use. What is to be done? Why, hollow out the center of the horn, of course; but stay—this will not do, because how is the horn to be supplied with blood vessels? In fact, how is it to grow? Let us see how it is done by the great Designer. Cut the horn right across with a saw, and you will find inside another horn, only made of bone. If the section is made about one-third of the way down the length of the horn you will be able to pick out a piece of bone in the shape of a cone, on which, or rather round which, the horn proper has shaped itself. This bone fits the cavity with the greatest accuracy; it is as light as the thinnest paper, and yet as strong as a cone of tin. It is everywhere perforated with holes, which in life contained the nerves, the veins and the arteries; and we know a cow has all these in her horns; nerves, proved by the fact that cows do not like their horns touched, and that they can scratch a fly off their hides with the tip of the horn; arteries and veins, proved by the fact that a horn, when broken, will bleed, and that the horn of a living cow feels quite warm when held in the hand, besides which the nerves and arteries form a union between the internal core of bone and the external covering of horn proper. If we now cut the rest of the horn into sections we shall find that the inside of the bony part is really hollow, but that very strong buttresses of bone are thrown (about every inch or so) across the cavity of the horn in such a manner as to give it the greatest possible support and strength. I have cut a cow's horn and skull into several sections, to show these buttresses of bone; and now that the preparation is finished, I have another specimen to show that there is design and beauty in all created objects."

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.
$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents trash, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. BRUSSAN BROTHERS,

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 5 feet 11 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending August 10:

Mississippi river and bayous	83
Red river	17
Ouachita river	15
Railroads	24
Mobile	1
Texas	4
Total	144

On Saturday there was very little inquiry, and the market appeared to be quite stagnant until a buyer came forward and took 40 bales peelers, which, with 3 bales mixed, constituted the entire business of the day. On Monday the bulk of the business was done during the morning by two buyers, who took together 390 bales for Liverpool and Genoa, at prices fully up to our quotations, after which there were additional sales of 72 bales, making a total of 462 bales. Middling sold at 14⅝@14¾c. The receipts included a bale of new crop by the Ouachita Belle, consigned to Messrs. Meyer, Weis & Co., which, being badly ginned and apparently immature, although of fair staple, brought only 14¾c. The bale received by the Jackson railroad on Saturday, which was well ginned, brought at the same time 18c., and was taken for Liverpool. On Tuesday the market exhibited less animation, but prices were steadily maintained, the sales embracing 205 bales, divided among four brokers. Among the sales we noticed strict middling at 14¾c. The receipts included 4 bales new crop. Five bales new crop from Brownsville, Texas, classing good middling, are offering at 15½c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 910 bales, against 162 for the corresponding time last week and 704 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 994,914 bales, against 1,215,919 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 305,591 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 308,349—3,491,321 against 3,799,673. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 43,271 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 13,539 to France, and of 165,927 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Ordinary	11 @ 11⅜
Strict ordinary	11⅝ @ 11¾
Good ordinary	11⅞ @ 12⅛
Strict good ordinary	12⅜ @ 12⅝
Low middling	13⅛ @ 13¼

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1875. NO. 34.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 10.—The corner-stone of the Wesley Monumental church was laid to-day with imposing ceremonies. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Drs. Axson, of the Presbyterian Church, Myers, of the Methodist Church, and Pierce. The latter is in his ninety-first year, and laid the corner-stone. Georgia is the first place where John Wesley labored in America. Ministers of all Protestant denominations participated.

FORT GIBSON, I. T., Aug. 10.—Election quiet, except in one precinct. The returns are slow, on account of high water, which prevented voters reaching the polls. It is generally conceded that Ross is re-elected. The Ross party has the Senate and Council.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 10.—Complete returns give a majority for the convention of 16,500. Delegates elected—Democrats, 81; Independent Democrats, 6; Republicans, 12.

The grasshoppers are damaging the crops in north Alabama.

SARATOGA, Aug. 11.—Ex-Gov. William A. Graham, of North Carolina, died of organic disease of the heart, at Congress Hall, this morning. He came here about three weeks since, and had been confined to his room four days.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Aug. 11.—Bishop Cummins, at a meeting of the Reformed Episcopal Church, said there were now fifty ministers and forty congregations of that church in the United States and Canada.

KEY WEST, Aug. 11.—The bark Hermann Becker, of Stettin, from Jamaica, put in here, the captain and a portion of her crew being down with yellow fever. One death had occurred.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 12.—Horace Binney, the oldest member of the Philadelphia bar, is dead, aged ninety-seven years. He graduated at Harvard in 1797.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—A letter from an American resident of Costa Rica says: "In July a number of Jesuits entered Costa Rica from Guatemala, whence they had been expelled. When within ten miles of the capital they were ordered to stop. Congress met the same day, and two thousand Masons went in a body to Congress Hall and petitioned for the Jesuits' removal as mischievous members of society. The president, who is a Mason, and several members prominent in debate and influence made able speeches on the subject, overruling those who favored charitable protection for the Jesuits. Congress finally voted them $1,500 for relief of their immediate wants and ordered them to leave the country."

Moody and Sankey have arrived. No reception was given them. Moody goes to Northfield, Mass., and Sankey to Philadelphia.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 14.—The river came to a stand last night and now stands a fraction over thirty-three feet eleven inches. There is no further damage reported. Though the river is higher than in the spring, the immense bottom between here and Crowley's Ridge has not been filled with water. There is great diversity of opinion as regards damage to the cotton crop in this district, which extends from the Missouri line to the mouth of the Arkansas. Some assert that the damage will aggregate one hundred thousand bales, while others who have watched the effect are equally confident it will not exceed thirty thousand bales. There is much rejoicing that the flood has reached its limit, and a consequent feeling of relief, and if a rapid decline sets in there will probably be no additional damage done.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 15.—Hon. Solomon Cohen died this morning, aged seventy-three. He was postmaster of this city under Pierce and Buchanan's administrations, also during the Confederacy, and was at one time a member of Congress from Georgia.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Gen. Brannan telegraphs from Pensacola navy-yard: "The superintendent of the national cemetery is taken sick with yellow fever. A corporal of marines is dead. All the rest are doing well."

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—The river has declined one-fourth of an inch, and by to-morrow it is thought a steady decline will set in. Water is running across the neck of Devil's Elbow, thirty miles above here, and some fear exists that it will cut through, and thus shorten the river some twenty-five miles, and cause a sudden rise in this vicinity; but those who are well informed do not believe the cut-off will be formed during the present rise.

The Ledger learns that on the night of the ninth an attempt was made to cut the levee at Beulah, near Napoleon, Ark. The levee patrol discovered the villains, and a fight ensued, resulting in the killing of one of the marauders, the wounding of two others, and the capture of a fourth.

ORANGE, TEXAS, Aug. 16.—The United States steamer Rio Bravo, en route from New Orleans to the Rio Grande, was struck by a heavy southerly gale, fifteen miles off Sabine Light, on the night of the thirteenth instant, and driven ashore ten miles east of Sabine Light. No lives lost. Everything was saved except the vessel, which is badly wrecked, but may be saved if the weather abates.

FOREIGN.

COPENHAGEN, August 11.—Hans Christian Andersen was buried to-day. The King attended the funeral. The whole nation mourns his death, and affecting tributes were received from abroad.

The obsequies took place to-day in Frau Kirche. The ceremonies were touching and impressive. The King and members of the royal family, with the ministers and chief officers of the government, assisted. Deputations came to the funeral from all parts of the kingdom. In the cathedral were representatives of public bodies, State and municipal, the diplomatic corps, the faculty and students of the university, workmen's societies, gentlemen of the press, including several connected with American journals, and an immense congregation of citizens, who filled every part of the edifice. The casket containing the remains was covered with hundreds of wreaths, laurels and floral offerings, many of which were sent from Germany and other countries. The day was made one of national mourning throughout Denmark. In this city business was suspended and the flags were at half mast.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—A telegram to the Times from Constantinople says two thousand Turkish troops have left for Herzegovina, via Klek. Advices from Constantinople say the Governor of Bosnia is ordered to send all available troops in that province against the insurgents. Two battalions were sent from this city to the scene; others will follow.

The Post publishes an account of a serious scuffle between the Russian and Prussian frontier guards. The affair was provoked by the Russians, who trespassed on German territory.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—An obstinate fight is reported, from Sclavonic sources, near Belchia, between the Herzegovinians and Turks, in which the latter were routed.

MADRID, Aug. 12.—A decree was issued to-day ordering a levy of one hundred thousand men from nineteen years of age upward. Another decree orders the issue of £60,000,000 consolidated interest scrip to pay the floating debt.

Gen. Martinez Campos, in a dispatch dated Seo de Urgel to-day, announces that the troops under his command, after desperate fighting, entered Olsana Tower. He lost one hundred killed. The Carlists' loss was still heavier, and many of the garrison were taken prisoners. The explosion of the magazine in the citadel made a large breach in the walls.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—La Rappel says fifty commercial corporations and trades unions will each send delegates to the centennial, to study and report upon objects exhibited.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—All the Catholic clergy holding State appointments in Posen have submitted to the ecclesiastical law.

MADRID, Aug. 15.—The Spanish government will soon send a royal commissioner to the Philadelphia exhibition.

RAGUSA, Aug. 15.—Intelligence has been received from Sclavonic sources that the insurgents in Herzegovina have stormed Fort Goronsko, near Piri, and captured the town of Metakia.

MADRID, Aug. 16.—Gen. Quesada, after a sharp fight, has captured the Carlists' position at Luneo, on the Villa railroad. The Carlist force mentioned on the tenth instant as having passed through Berga, with the expectation of surprising the Alfonsists engaged in the siege of Seo de Urgel, approached to within three leagues of the besieged town, but the movements of the royal army necessitated again their retreat to the mountains.

THE REV. A. P. PARKER, of the Missouri Conference, says the Western Methodist, has been selected by Bishop McTyeire to re-enforce our mission in China. He is reported to be well qualified in every sense for the work. He expects to sail for China in company with Mrs. Lambuth in October. This beloved sister, having left her husband at his work in China, is now visiting her native land. Since she arrived her mother has died, whom she had not seen for ten years. It was a precious privilege to the daughter to watch at the bedside of her now sainted mother. A son of Brother and Sister Lambuth was graduated at the recent commencement of Emory and Henry College. He will enter the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University, to prepare himself fully to join his father as a missionary in China. The only daughter will remain in this country, under the care of Dr. Kelley, to be recruited in health and to complete her education. Mrs. Lambuth is visiting Sunday schools in various sections of the country, and giving them information about the Chinese and our work among them. Our Sunday schools in this city would be glad to receive a visit from her.

HON. JAMES JACKSON.—We have learned with mingled emotions, says the Southern Christian Advocate, that Judge Jackson has been tendered and has accepted a position upon the bench of the Supreme Court of Georgia. A jurist of vast legal learning and invulnerable integrity, we congratulate the people of Georgia upon so distinguished an addition to the judiciary of the State in its highest tribunal. The only drawback to our unqualified satisfaction lies in the fact that the appointment entails upon the society and the Methodist church of Macon the loss of Judge Jackson and his accomplished family. Their departure from our midst—which we are glad to know will be delayed some months—will be universally regretted; and it is but partial compensation to know that what we lose will be gained by Atlanta.

From the Work.

CADDO CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We write you from this once beautiful and prosperous but now downtrodden and afflicted land, that you may feel your sympathies and prayers drawn out in our behalf. This parish was formerly among the richest in the State, but is now among the poorest. The white population in many sections is very sparse, and in all it is but a remnant of the years now beyond the flood, of which the memory alone remains in the bosoms of the older inhabitants. The negro population preponderates in an overwhelming degree, and is becoming more and more useless and troublesome every year. In the midst of all these discouragements there are some signs of life in the land. The Savior assured his disciples that wars and commotions might arise and sweep away every barrier to vice and irreligion; yet "when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth."

At Friendship church we have some signs of real improvement. Congregations are good, singing is much more in the spirit, and the members are praying for better times. By the way, some of the members of former years have returned from foreign lands, and are again welcomed to the church in which they lived and worshiped years agone.

At Greenwood we have no church nor house of worship, neither Methodist preaching. Pray, Mr. Editor, for Greenwood. Since the removal of Bros. Harper, Doty and others we have been left without a congregation, though we still have some faithful, zealous ones, who are the same in all weathers.

At Mount Zion we have a large congregation, composed entirely of young people, except two old ladies—precious relics of the past glory of Methodism there. Bros. Lindsey and Gray, the stewards, both removed last year. Oh, that they and their kind wives were back again. The Presbyterians alternate with us at this place, and have a good, faithful membership. They are very fraternal.

At Mooringsport a new church has been built. It is thirty-two by fifty feet, and is a beautiful church for the country. It is situated on the bank of Caddo lake, and faces as fine a view as there is in the South. This church is the result of persistent effort and benevolent enterprise upon the part of a few men, fostered by the prayers and good wishes of a large portion of the community. They will pardon a well-intended but well-deserved mention in this connection. It has been owing almost entirely to the zeal, energy and liberality of Mr. C. S. Croom and Bros. J. S. Noel and B. M. Martin that this church is built, and that it stands as an ornament and a credit to the surrounding country. May God bless and prosper each of them! The dedication took place on the fourth Sabbath in June, and was attended by an immense concourse of people. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper and baptism of infants were administered—the one to an earnest, faithful few, and the other to eleven beautiful and promising children.

It was not our fortune to attend the commencement exercises at Mansfield, but we have had the pleasure of entertaining President Armstrong at our house. We do not think the daughters of Caddo and of Louisiana could do better than to be placed under the guardian care of this high-toned, scholarly gentleman and Christian. He has engaged the services of Prof. Doll, an excellent German and musical scholar, who, together with his accomplished lady, will infuse new life into the department of music, and make it an element of strength rather than of weakness.—Let every Methodist girl rally to Mansfield. We are glad to learn that the president has concentrated all the local patronage around the school, thus placing it on a firmer basis than ever before.

Our third quarterly meeting has been held. Bro. Scott was present, presiding and preaching to the satisfaction of the people. May the great Head of the church bless his heritage on Caddo circuit, and raise up a people for his name. Yours in love,

GREENWOOD.

DELHI DISTRICT.—FIELD NOTES. Mr. Editor: In our part of the great field we are having success in some quarters. The brethren are diligently sowing fresh seed and cultivating the plants that are already growing. In some places the drouth has been quite severe, and some plants have "withered away." In other places the gentle rains have descended, and "every plant looks gay and green." Our hearts are saddened by the fact that there are so many "stony places," and so many "fowls of the air to devour" that which is sown; but we sow on, remembering the injunction: "Sow in the morn thy seed; at night withhold not thy hand." We sow and pray that our successors may reap largely. We watch over souls and pray for their deliverance from all enemies. We rejoice in the fact of growth. There are more workers and braver workers than we had last season. We have some new "lands" among the tender plants, and their success has been truly great. Some neglected places have been in charge of experienced cultivators, and the changes they have wrought are most important and delightful. We hope to report more favorably hereafter.

P. E.

VERNON MISSION, JACKSON DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: Yesterday, after the morning service, I closed a protracted meeting of eight days at Vernon. With joy and humble gratitude to God I announce that by said meeting we obtained nineteen accessions to the church—one by letter, eighteen by faith. Six of them were converted to God in my presence. Nine of the eighteen who joined by faith were young ladies. Besides this we have now in Vernon a monthly class meeting and a weekly prayer meeting.

Before this communication will appear in the ADVOCATE the lady members in and around Vernon will have organized a Wesleyan society, the object of which is to repair and furnish the church.

In closing I would express my thanks to Rev. Thomas B. Holloman for assistance rendered.

BEVERLY CARRAWINE, P. C.

AUGUST 9, 1875.

ROSE HILL.—Mr. Editor: Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper, as I am a friend to Methodism, as also to your paper. The friends at Rose Hill, with their leader (Congregational,) commenced a meeting on the thirty-first of July, and continued it five days and nights. It seemed to me that I never before saw the power and love of God so fully displayed, even from the commencement to the close. Sinners were awakened, backsliders reclaimed, old soldiers made happy in the Lord, and sectarianism driven out of the ranks when the sound was heard. With the Apostle Peter, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. The result of the meeting was twenty-two accessions to the church, as also the dedicating of several children to God by baptism.

A FRIEND.

AUGUST 8, 1875.

TO SUPERINTENDENTS OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE. Dear Brethren: For some time I have been thinking of addressing you on this important subject, viz.: A council of the superintendents of the Mississippi Conference, to be held this fall at some central place, and to be made a permanent organization, meeting annually.

You all can see in an instant the reason for this organization: To promote the general interests of this great work for the Master; to interchange opinions and plans for best conducting Sunday schools; to build up good plans, and work up to them. The Sunday school is second to no work in his kingdom, and why not do all that is possible for the good of the cause? There is much to be done. Now let us come together and do it.

All who favor this plan and will attend will please notify me immediately, naming the place of your choice for holding the first session.

Fraternally yours,

B. H. CATCHING.

Periodicals.

WIDE AWAKE is the title of an illustrated magazine for girls and boys, published by D. Lathrop & Co., Boston. The illustrations are very fine, and the reading matter adapted to very young people. We have received No. 2.

THE American Agriculturist for July is profusely illustrated, and filled with valuable information for farmers and housekeepers.

OUR MISSION WORK IN MEXICO.

Rev. Joel T. Daves, superintendent of our mission in Mexico, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, June 25, says:

There are most emphatic signs of improvement in the mission work. Strong forward movements are seen all along the lines. This, perhaps, is not so much in an increase of numbers—though that is a marked feature—as in a most decided improvement in spirit. There is more heart and soul in songs, prayers and sermons than ever before. The thousands of God's Israel in Mexico are being led on through the wilderness, and are developed as the quickening, enlightening genius of Protestantism becomes more manifest. The very means used by Romanism—persecutions, mobs and assassinations—only serve to deepen conviction and strengthen the gospel.

Rev. Drs. Butler, Baily and Hutchinson, respectively of the Northern Methodist, Protestant Episcopal and Northern Presbyterian Churches, are pushing forward their work with zeal and energy. They are gradually but surely making their way out into the regions beyond.

To-day I was called on to baptize an infant whose parents and friends live nearly twenty-one miles from the city. They brought their little one all this distance to have him dedicated to God in holy baptism. Though of the poorer and uneducated class, they seemed to have a clear and intelligent understanding of the obligations assumed. This family, and a large circle of friends and relations, are the fruits of labor bestowed years ago by our Mexican brother and co-laborer, Senor Don Sosthenes Juarez. As one of the pastors of our congregation here, I called upon him to assist me in the service. He ought by all means to receive ordination. I can but hope that Bishop Keener will be able to visit us next winter or spring. If so, Mr. Juarez and others can receive orders. Sea la paz de Dios con Usted.

Straws on a Balmy Breeze.

We have a strong belief that the missionary spirit of the church is rising, and there are, indeed, strong and urgent reasons why the tide should roll in deep and high. A letter from Bro. Daves in Mexico is full of regret that we are not able to do more for that opening field. He greatly fears that the appropriation made will render some of the most important interests under his care almost abortive. Of the school he says: "I must confess to great astonishment that not one cent was appropriated to our school. It was the grand success of all mission work in Mexico. I carried it on from June, 1874, to February, 1875, at an expense of about $115 per month; had a daily average attendance of about one hundred and twenty-five boys and girls. I shall take the liberty of opening again, anyhow, as soon as I can finish my school-room." Brave purpose this of our Bro. Daves. May God put it in our hearts to sustain him. Who will help Bro. Daves' school? Send us your names and money. But it was not of wants, but of supplies, we purposed to speak when our pencil traced the heading to this article.

RESPONSES TO PROPOSITIONS.

To the proposition of the Rev. J. T. Curry, since last report, we have the following note:

"JACKSONVILLE, ALA., July 11, 1875.

"DR. A. H. REDFORD, Treasurer: In response to a letter from J. T. Curry, I agree to be one of the hundred to send one missionary to Brazil. I make the pledge for three years. I can't preach, but I can work. I am willing to help the work on.

S. B. WHITE, JR."

To the layman's proposition, made at the Nashville District Conference, to be one of one hundred to pay $5 each to pay the expenses of the Rev. J. J. Ransom, a preacher in the same district, who has been appointed by Bishop Keener to Brazil, there are now reported thirty-six responses. All of this to be above the assessments of the churches.

D. C. KELLEY.

THE WIDOW'S MITE.—A poor widow proposes to give $5 annually to the Brazil mission. Inclosed find postoffice order for the first installment. Permit me to give you a brief history of the case. She thought she would like to do something for that enterprise, but she had no means. She prayed over it. Last Wednesday a friend said to her, "I have $8 for you," and handed it to her. She asked my advice as to whether she could give five of it to the mission. I told her she must decide for herself; to pray about it, and report next morning. Thursday morning she saw me and gave me the $5. Before either of us had taken a seat, in less than three minutes, a gentleman, not knowing what had occurred, while bidding her farewell, left a $5 bill in her hand. She does not care to have her name known, and sends the money in the name of "The Widow of a Traveling Preacher." This occurred at the Seashore camp meeting.

GREENVILLE, ALA., July 31, 1875.

ADVANCE.—A correspondent writes to Dr. Kelley: "Inclosed find check for $25 additional for my circuit. I will raise almost if not quite $100 for this cause alone—more than has been raised upon all the collections for twenty years on this field.

— CIRCUIT, Virginia Conference."

Very True.

The Methodist of July 17, speaking of Round Lake and Fraternity, touches several points with fairness and truth. If the preachers and politicians do not stir up strife for partisan ends, and flood the Northern press with slanderous misrepresentations of the South in 1876, the cause of true fraternity will grow and prosper. Northern preachers and politicians in the South have been the chief agents of inciting a spirit of distrust and bitterness. The Methodist says:

The fraternal spirit needed to be cultivated at the North. We have been slow to believe in the Christian spirit and patriotic purpose of our late antagonists. Politicians have cultivated distrust and apprehension, and preachers have sometimes forgotten their Christian calling in the heat of political strife. We are not anxious to remember these things, but we have been compelled to think of them by timid people who still fear that the South wishes to restore slavery, renew the war and destroy the Union. They were told so in the campaign of 1874, and, though the politicians have almost forgotten these incendiary declarations, people who vote conscientiously have better memories.

Southern men who were with us in July, 1874, went home to be informed in September that they needed military subjugation and were full of treasonable purpose, and, what was the keenest thrust of all, to learn these awful things from Northern Methodist ministers. It was not a good preparation for the meeting of this year, but the meeting has been held, and leaves us in better spirit than we found ourselves in a year ago. In spite of the terrible strain of the last political campaign, fraternal feeling is far in advance of last year.

During the year many Northern Methodists have come to believe in the good faith of the South, especially of Southern Methodists. The old distrust is dying out on all sides. We meet men every day who confess to a change of view within the last twelve months. The tide of national feeling is rising, and the memory of the old patriotism is creating a new and richer love of country. We have to thank God for most gratifying progress.

Christian people are naturally solicitous for the year to come, and especially for the autumn of 1876. We do not think it possible that the old war cries can be raised in that year. They failed to carry the elections in 1874; after the centennial of 1876 it will be an insane folly to raise them again. The small politicians who have been accustomed to ring the changes on "rebellion," "slavery" and "disloyalty" may as well get out their primers and study a new language. The election of 1876 cannot turn upon sectional animosities and historical hatreds.

The church and the nation are alike interested in attaining to a settled confidence that the war is over for good; that the new nation is enduringly united on the basis of equality before the law for both colors, and all creeds and opinions. These distrusts—natural enough until a recent period—have retarded our growth, wasted political energy, diverted our attention from pressing questions of public policy, and given a feverish tone to public life. We want the sense of peace; there is no good reason why we should not have it. At Round Lake confidence was strong, aggressive, irresistible. We should have the fullest sense of rest and union, if we could see more of each other in the two sections, pray more with and for each other, unite more in labor to extend the bounds of our home missionary fields. In short, we need Christian co-operation as a means to firm and settled confidence in the stability of the temple we are rearing to Peace.

READVILLA, BATON ROUGE, LA. Of this excellent institution we find a discriminating notice by Spectator, in the Baton Rouge Weekly Advocate of July 10. We give a brief extract, as follows:

This young ladies' seminary was incorporated in 1842, and has been in operation ever since, and its alumni are scattered all over the Southern country. There is probably no seminary for young ladies in the State that stands higher or is more proficient in the culture of the young mind than this one. Mrs. M. W. Read, the principal of the institution, is a model teacher. With an experience extending through a series of years in the training and culture of young ladies, she possesses a finely cultivated mind, a thorough education, and a tact for governing by kindness alone, that renders the institution at once a home for the young lady and the principal a mother for a guardian.

Her corps of teachers are as good as can be found; and indeed, with her experience and knowledge of teachers and teaching, none but the best could find an occupation under her management. The department of music is in charge of an elegant teacher, and one, too, who knows not only how it ought to be performed, but who is herself an elegant performer and a sweet singer.

THE touch of a little child's hand has opened many a door through which the Master has afterward come in, sat down and supped.

YOUR MISSION.

If you cannot on the ocean sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the mighty billows, laughing at the storms you meet,
You can stand among the sailors anchored yet within the bay,
You can lend a hand to help them as they launch their boats away.

If you are too weak to journey up the mountain steep and high,
You can stand within the valley as the multitudes go by;
You can chant in happy measures as they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer, they will ne'er forget the song.

If you cannot in the conflict prove yourself a warrior true,
If where fire and smoke are thickest there's no work for you to do,
When the battle-field is silent you can go with gentle tread,
You can bear away the wounded, you can cover up the dead.

If you cannot in the harvest gather up the richest sheaves,
Many a grain both ripe and golden, which the careless reaper leaves,
You can glean among the briers growing rank against the wall,
And it may be that the shadows hide the heaviest wheat of all.

If you have not gold and silver ever ready at command,
If you cannot toward the needy reach an ever helping hand,
You can visit the afflicted, o'er the erring you can weep,
You can be a true disciple, sitting at the Savior's feet.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting for some noble work to do
For your heavenly Father's glory; ever ready, ever true,
Go and toil in any vineyard—work in patience and in prayer;
If you want a field of labor you can find it anywhere.

Created Holiness or Created Sin an Absurdity.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to see the pure minds of so many of the brethren stirred up on this subject. The ADVOCATE is a live paper. We have newspapers enough. We want discussion—things new and old, germs of thought for pulpit and people; long articles for long readers, and short articles for short readers. All the brethren except Bro. Smith seem to be on the other side, and he appears to be on both sides. Would it not be well for him to remain another year at Jericho? May be his beard will grow?

The doctrines of created holiness and created sin are inseparably connected with the doctrine of predestination or necessity. The distinctive dogmas of liberty and necessity have been warmly discussed in the intellectual world for more than three thousand years. Moschus, a Phenician, is said to be the founder of the philosophy of the necessity of all things. Democritus matured the atomic physiology, and openly taught the atheistic doctrine of fate. The Jewish Essenes were the first theists who openly held the doctrine of necessity. There was a sect at an early day in the Christian church called Nioteric Christians, who held similar views—Cudworth says: "Contrary to the sense of the ancient church." St. Augustine was a Greek, and was educated in the atomic physiology. He claims to be the founder of the doctrine of imputed sin and predestination, or the doctrine of divine necessity, by which "God decrees whatsoever comes to pass." For more than three thousand years have true philosophy, metaphysics and true religion had to contend with this error of all errors. It is the foundation for all debauchery, skepticism and infidelity. It has served the designs of atheism under whatever garb they have appeared. It has undermined Christianity and all true religion. It takes away all guilt and blame, punishments and rewards, and makes the day of judgment ridiculous. The full-grown doctrine of divine fate, introduced into the Christian church in the fourth century by St. Augustine, or more properly the monster Augustine, was the beginning of the dark ages that cursed Christianity for more than a thousand years, and still hangs over the moral universe like the pall of death. It is the Egyptian darkness that is felt throughout the whole moral universe. Talk of dead issues! There is hardly a church in Christendom that does not more or less paralyze her moral powers by ignoring, in some way or other, the doctrine of liberty. Calvinism dead! It may be inoperative in some places; but it is a part of depravity, and the largest part of it, and will never die while there is selfishness or sin in the human soul. Created holiness, created sin, imputed sin and imputed righteousness all have their origin in the doctrine of divine necessity. To hold to created holiness, and not to created sin, is simply nonsense; and to hold to created holiness and liberty is worse than nonsense. The brethren quote Mr. Wesley and Watson, without seeming to look to their surroundings. They had to pick and cut and cull out from the old rubbish of a thousand years, and organize a system of theology in harmony with the Bible and the moral universe. Had they attempted to force upon the moral world, in its then demoralized condition, all the moral truth indicated in their doctrine, instead of redeeming the world from false theology they would have been defeated. Liberty, in contradistinction to necessity, is the great central doctrine of Methodism, from which all her other truths emanate.

God is love. Holiness in God is that perfect righteousness he exercises toward all his creatures, according to the principles of eternal, immutable morality.—See Dr. Cudworth, second volume, pages 365–497. What is sin? A transgression of the law. What is holiness? Entire obedience to the law by a rational soul.

There cannot, in the nature and order of things, exist at all a moral universe without the existence of two separate and distinct wills. There must exist, at the same time, full scope for contingent liberty to move up and down, unrestrained by any inward force, or controlled by any outer law of necessity. Without the existence of such fundamental principles God could not exercise either his justice or his providence. If Adam was created holy, why not place him on the platform of other creatures? Created holiness could not rise above holy instinct. If already holy, why endow him with the fearful responsibility of freedom, and, still more, place him under the law of good and evil, and then subject him to temptation? If his holiness was created, it certainly did not need to be tried by law and temptation. God could not create anything but pure holiness. If Adam was created holy, why not leave out of creation the whole moral contingent universe, rewards and punishments, together with providence?

If Adam had been created holy his holiness would have been after the type of the spider when it weaves its web, or the bird when it builds its nest. The great end reached, the means are meaningless. Nothing but men and angels need a moral universe. The bird will build her nest in season, and the ant prepare her food without guide or overseer. If God can create sin or holiness, then he can propagate sin or holiness by generation—as he makes cabbage—and the whole moral universe is a solemn farce. All acts are arbitrary things; and the rational soul is forever left in mystery to explain God's utterances of "Well done, good and faithful servant;" or, from the same mysterious judgment seat: "Thou wicked and slothful servant." Adam was just what he made himself morally, and his children are just like him. The soul that sins shall die, whether in paradise or Alabama. The angels who sinned were cast out of heaven. God's moral universe is the same. He that doeth righteously is righteous. Some of the brethren say a man cannot make himself holy. A man's throat may be so swollen that he cannot swallow water, and he will die of thirst; and a man may sin away his day of grace. If a man can slake his thirst by drinking water, he can become holy by using the means of holiness. The Hard-Shells preach in this country that man cannot do anything toward his salvation. Methodists exhort men to repent, not because they cannot, but because they can.

God cannot, in the order of things, by a sovereign act, make holiness or sin. The laws of holiness and sin are eternal and immutable. No arbitrary decree can make a sinner holy, or a holy man or angel a sinner. He that is holy, let him be holy still. No judgment can change it. It requires the same moral force to all eternity to keep a man or angel holy that it took to make him holy. The angels that kept not their first estate were cast out of heaven. The philosophy of the success of Methodism is found exclusively in her doctrine of liberty and responsibility. The same doctrine, when preached by Calvinists in their protracted meetings, is successful. The doctrine of necessity weakens the moral forces in the soul. No mind can be properly convicted for sin by preaching the doctrine of created holiness, or imputed sin or divine necessity. Such teaching relieves the soul of all responsibility.

I have been compelled to be concise in this article, but I have endeavored to be understood. It is sometimes important that readers have some general information, as well as writers.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

GREENVILLE, ALA., August 4, 1875.

Selma Dist., Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Selma District Conference held its fifth annual session at Choctaw Corner, from the fourteenth to the eighteenth of July. As there was no Bishop present, the presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Briggs, called the Conference to order at the hour, and entered on the duties of president. There were seventy members present, which was the largest attendance I ever witnessed at a District Conference.

The chair, by order of the Conference, appointed a committee of nine laymen from different parts of the district to consider and report on the spiritual state of the church, whose report has already gone to you, separate from this, for publication. I admire the plan. You then get a report from a different standpoint, based on the facts and statements of the preachers.

The pastors' reports exhibited a wholesome administration of discipline, a larger than usual attendance on preaching, an improvement in the finances and the social meetings of the church, and also a healthy and progressive state of Sunday schools. There is but little dancing, but little drinking and selling of whisky, and a good deal of family prayer in the bounds of the Selma district. There was an hour of prayer set apart by the Conference for the exclusive use and benefit of Sunday schools.

The Conference recommended the adoption of the assessment plan for raising money for ministerial support throughout the district.

William E. Kennedy, J. H. Malone, Samuel Forwood and Col. L. W. Reeves were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Benjamin Rush and George Fountain alternates.

The Conference resolved to support one young minister in the Southern University at Greensboro, and apportioned the sums necessary to defray his expenses to the various pastoral charges, to be collected by the pastors. It then determined to support a second young minister at the same institution, and made it the duty of the presiding elder to raise the money; whereupon he said that if he had it to raise, the sooner the better; and in less than ten minutes he raised the money there on the Conference floor. So this District Conference educates two ministers. Is not this a noble example? Young Bros. Cowan and Carmichael were made the beneficiaries of this fund.

The claims of the ADVOCATE, and our educational interests and institutions of learning, were represented and received due attention.

We had preaching twice per day—at eleven in the morning and again at night. The congregations were large and attentive from first to last.

The Conference was well entertained. There are honest, true-hearted people around Choctaw Corner—simple and plain in their habits, yet sensible and religious.

It is a matter of profound regret throughout the district that our presiding elder is to leave us, and several ties that were formed in adversity, and now to be broken up just as the golden tinge of prosperity is seen along our horizon; and I think I utter the sentiments of the District Conference when I say to him: "Hail and farewell!"

The next Conference goes to Marion. WM. A. EDWARDS, Sec.

Carvosso's Experience.

1. Perfect love admits of a direct and satisfactory testimony from the Spirit as to the time when God accomplishes the great work within.

2. Faith alone is the condition and instrument of its application.

3. It does not make a man independent of the atonement; but, on the contrary, increases the believer's consciousness of its necessity and inestimable worth; inasmuch as the holiness of God, the purity and extent of the law, the sinfulness of sin, and the defects of our lives are better understood.

4. A present profession of enjoyment of the blessing is not responsible for failures past or to come. He that can now say, "In me verily is the love of God perfected," may have grieved the Spirit since he first knew this salvation by experience, and may again cast away his confidence and feel a return of the carnal mind; for he stands only one moment at a time, and that moment by a faith whose life depends on his constancy in watching unto prayer.

5. In the time of temptation, when the soul is stripped of the joyous witness of the blessing, it is our privilege and our duty to go at once to the atoning sacrifice and exercise a bold and firm reliance on Christ for present and full salvation, and this brings that blessed inward witness, the absence of which was a little before so sensibly felt.

6. When the believer has sustained a spiritual loss, and is conscious he has given way to sin, on the first perception of it he should humbly but instantly fly to the blood that makes the wounded whole, resting therein, and agonizing in prayer till the soul be again completely restored.

7. Although the enjoyment of perfect love does not admit of outward or inward sin, properly so called, yet it does admit of a strong conviction of the presence of numberless shortcomings and infirmities; and requires a vivid perception of the evil of fallen, unregenerate nature, the aggravation of actual sins that are past, and judgment for which they are continually calling, should we be found one moment separate from the atoning blood.

THE Boston Girls' Cooking Club is in a flourishing condition. The first class succeeded in cooking a turkey the other day, and only made one blunder. They forgot to "draw" it before committing it to the oven. Or that's the way one of those wretched reporters tells the story.

—Osaka, Japan, with a population of 330,000, has 1,380 Buddhist temples, and 538 temples of the ancient Sinto faith.

GRASSHOPPERS IN CHINA.—The local authorities, whether civil or military, are held responsible for the stamping out of these insects as soon as their appearance has been reported. They are required to summon a large body of men, and at once surround and destroy the locusts, the expenses of the maintenance of the men and compensation for the crops trodden down during the chase being supplied by the provincial treasury. Should the local authorities succeed in stamping out the locusts within a limited time, their services are favorably reported to the Emperor; but should they fail, and the locusts spread and do damage, they are liable to be deprived of their posts, arrested and handed over to the proper board for punishment. A certain sum per bushel is paid to peasants bringing in unwinged locusts, and half that sum when the locusts are able to fly, while compensation is given for crops trodden down in the chase. The locusts are swept with besoms into trenches dug at the side of the corn-fields, in which a vigorous fire is kept up. The best time to capture locusts is when they are feeding at dawn of day, when, their bodies being heavy with dew and their wings wet, they are unable to jump or fly. If the Western States or any parts of them are to be visited by the locusts in the future, as they have been of late years, some defense will have to be adopted. Under existing circumstances the use of men in large numbers is impracticable, and the ingenuity of inventors or scientists is our only hope. The prospect, it must be confessed, is not very cheering, for the vast uninhabited regions afford breeding grounds which effectually defy all attempts at extermination.—Christian Intelligencer.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, after an illness of only a few days, in Columbia, Ala., on the eighth of May, 1875, JOHN DAVIS, of Marianna, Fla.

The above short announcement has carried and will carry grief to many who enjoyed the acquaintance of our deceased brother. His has been a long and useful life. Born in Savannah, Ga., in 1801, he was soon taken to Mississippi, and from thence to west Florida while still a boy. In the prime of manhood he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, to which he remained faithfully and devotedly attached till taken up to join the church on high.

He was punctual in his attendance upon divine worship, and was devotedly fond of the class and prayer meetings and love-feasts.

In his old age—his wife having died some years ago—Clarke's Commentaries and Wesley's works were his companions. He read much and prayed much. In 1864 he was called to take command of a force of home guards in his State, and in September (I think it was,) in a fight at Marianna with a raiding force, he was seriously wounded, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. But I do not care to speak of his life as a public man, for as a man John Davis belonged to the State of Florida. Then let Florida speak the praises of him who had done so much as he to advance the interests of her people at large. It is only of John Davis, the Christian, belonging to the church, the kingdom of Jesus, that I would speak. His Christian life was exemplary. With him "to live was Christ, and to die was gain." I need not say more. M. E. BUTT.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The undersigned, a committee appointed by the second Quarterly Conference of Marianna station, Methodist Episcopal Church South, to prepare a tribute to the memory of our deceased brother, John Davis, who departed this life on the eighth day of May, 1875, would submit the following:

That by the death of Bro. Davis a good man has fallen in our midst.

That our community has lost a high-toned gentleman, the State an upright and exemplary citizen, the church an active, zealous and efficient member, and the cause of religion a pure and lovely Christian character.

That in his constitution were happily blended all the attributes of an honest and a godly man—a man in all the relations of life faithful and honorable, just and true; and, above all, a Christian man, humble, sincere, devout, exhibiting in a remarkable degree that ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which renders the professors of religion lovely and pleasant in their lives, and those virtues and graces which invest religion itself with so much of luster, beauty and genuine attractiveness.

That we feel and mourn the loss of our esteemed and beloved brother, and that to his family and friends we tender our sincerest condolence in their bereavement.

JOS. T. RUSS,
B. G. ALEERMAN,
M. GUYTON.

MRS. MARY MORRIS, whose maiden name was Price, was born June 28, 1833, and died June 30, 1875, aged forty-two years and two days. She was married twice—first to Mr. Joseph Byrd, on the second of January, 1851, and again, on the twenty-second of December, 1868, to Mr. James R. Morris. By her first marriage five children were born, all living; by her second marriage two were born, one of whom preceded her only a few days to the spirit land, aged two years and a half; and the other, a little girl some five years old, is still living. She joined the church when quite young, and entered into covenant with her God in early maidenhood. She was a converted woman and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for nearly twenty-five years. She "remembered her Creator in the days of her youth," and was not forgotten by her Redeemer; and at the end of her pilgrimage, when called to go from this earth, his grace was sufficient for her. Having lived well, she died well.

She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. They will henceforth miss her in the loving ministrations of a good and true wife and mother. Her words of love and cheer, her kind admonitions and watchful care over the household have ceased; but the promises of the Father are theirs. To his loving care, who doeth all things well, we commit them, and pray for the ministrations of his grace and Spirit and providence in their behalf, who are orphans indeed.

On Sunday before she died she gathered her family around her and exhorted them to meet her in heaven, "where parting is no more." She said she "was not afraid to die;" "would only like to live for the sake of her husband and children," but was fully resigned to the will of God. So lives and so dies the Christian, doing, suffering, and resigned to the will of God.

BEAUREGARD, MISS., August 2, 1875.

DR. WILLIAM MCLEAN died May 3, 1875, aged sixty-three years, one month and seventeen days.

The doctor was a true, faithful and useful member of the church, and he leaves for our inheritance the bright evidence of his acceptance with God, and of his safe exit from this world of suffering to that world where "sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more." The writer visited him a few days before his death. He was aware of his near approach to the grave. He talked calmly about dying, and said that for many years he had lived in view of the great change, and that he was now ready to meet it. O blessed thought to have that vital union to Christ and full assurance of hope that claim the victory over death! He died in glorious triumph. It is seldom death summons one from the walks of life whose loss is more deeply and generally felt. He was eminently useful as a member of the church in sustaining and forwarding her interests. His house was always open to the preachers, and his liberal hand ever ready to administer to their comfort. As long as he was able he was among the sick and the dying, administering both to their physical and spiritual wants. He was a kind husband, a tender father, who left a loving wife and a dutiful son to mourn their sad loss and battle with the conflicts of life.

While we are left to weep we have the blessed assurance that our brother will rise again—"that though he be dead, yet shall he live."

D. J. WRIGHT.

WILLIAM GRIFFIN LAMPKIN was born September 30, 1819; was married to Miss Susan Stevenson January 23, 1845; was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South nearly thirty years; died June 25, 1875, and was buried by the Masonic fraternity in the Odd Fellows' cemetery in Starkville, Miss.

Bro. Lampkin had gone about twenty miles from home to attend to some business, was taken violently ill on Wednesday night, and died on Friday morning. As soon as he was taken sick he sent for his wife and children. She and several members of his family went to him at once, though he was not conscious when they reached him.

I have just finished reading a private record which he kept during the war. There are many items of interest in this record; but two things are prominent, which show that he was a true and good man—his love for his family and his interest in religion. Although he was permitted to return to his family, and enjoy their society a few years, yet again has he been called from them, not to go forth to the blood-stained fields of war, but

"To lay his armor by,
And dwell with Christ at home."

It is proverbial that the army was a good place to try a man. From what Bro. Lampkin has written it is evident that he did not forget or neglect his Christian duties while a soldier.

The devoted husband, the affectionate father, the kind brother, the good man, is gone. "The memory of the just is blessed." May his family emulate his virtues, and meet him in the city of God.

DIED, on the thirteenth of June, near Providence, La., Mrs. FANNIE RICHARDSON TAYLOR, in the thirty-first year of her age.

The subject of this memoir is my very dear niece, the eldest child of my deceased brother, Francis B. Richardson. When a very young child—not more than five years old—her father and mother both died, the same week, of yellow fever, leaving three little children—Fannie the eldest—to be raised without recollection of father or mother. In the month of December of last year, in company with my husband, I visited our niece at her own home in the country, about five miles from Providence, La. I saw then that consumption had claimed her for its victim; and when I looked around upon her home and its surroundings, and realized through what toil and anxiety and disappointment, so incident to the efforts of making crops on the lands of the Mississippi within the past few years, I wondered not that this dear one had been called thus early in life to her last resting-place. She was attended during her last hours by her kind husband and loving sister, the only one now left of five in the family. This sister had left her home in Texas to go and watch by the bedside of this last one of her family through the lingering, wavering moments of the consumptive's life.

Fannie left us in calm resignation, for in reply to her sister, who would read to her the precious promises of the Savior, and talked to her of the prospect that was opening up before her, she replied: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, and die calmly, sweetly falling asleep in Jesus."

She was amiable and patient through a life of many vicissitudes. In death she was calm, resigned and conscious to the last. Her aunt,

MARTHA L. KAVANAUGH.

DIED, of consumption, near Providence, Carroll parish, La., Mrs. MARY ELIZA POWELL. Sister Powell was the daughter of Maj. D. C. Lewis, formerly of Wilkinson county, Miss., was born June 12, 1845, and was baptized by Dr. W. H. Watkins, of Natchez. About the close of the war she joined the church at Hillsboro, Scott county, Miss., under the ministry of Bro. J. M. Pugh.

On November 30, 1870, she was married to G. W. Powell, of Warren county, Miss., and came to Louisiana in January, 1875. In the following February she was attacked by pneumonia, which terminated in consumption, and her spirit, perfected through suffering, was released from its earthly tenement on the morning of July 14, 1875.

Sister Powell was the daughter of pious parents, and gave her heart to her Savior in its vigor and strength, and by her exemplary life and peaceful death manifested his power to save to the uttermost all that come to God through him.

ONE may learn from the figures below what it costs to run a great newspaper: The editorial writers of the New York Herald are John D. Stockton, who gets a yearly salary of $4,000; John Russell Young, $6,000; Charles Nordhoff and Ivory Chamberlain, who get each a yearly salary of $7,000. The managing editor gets a salary of $5,000, and several others get from $2,500 to $3,000 a year. Salaries paid to the Tribune writers are still higher.

IT IS a high, solemn, almost awful thought for every individual, that his earthly influence, which has had a commencement here, will never, through all ages, were he the very meanest of us all, have an end.—Carlyle.
